I just really hate the new 2.0. It's absolutely wayyyyy overblown with unnecessary crap that makes it basically scooterfucked IMO. If I buy EZ Drummer 2.0 and DFH Superior, will I have a decent sample library with percussion instruments and will I be glad I did or does it suck too? I just want something easy to use that sounds good. the only thing I can think of that suks worse then the new BFD is the old, original DFH.

Man, DJ, I keep telling and recomending Addictive Drums. I have th eEZ drum kits as well, but Addictive is way better(Sounding) and it's layout is very easy,yet powerful.

BTW: The New Superior 2.0 looks to be in the frame work of Addicive drums.

have you tried groove agent?it doesn't get any easier than that.It has a built in percussionist (GA3).It has allot of other cool features.
Even easier than that....how about a real drummer?what a concept! Rod is available isn't he?and he doesn't even have to be there.

Wow. That has to be a joke, right? Those sounds are terrible. How could they get all those fancy folks to say otherwise? Sounds like a drum machine floating in a sea of 12 bit reverb with the mix on 100%.

Man this thread is eye opening. Steven Slate actually has a great reputation, for the right application. To each his/her own.

DJ, I thought you were all over BFD. I just finally bought Drumagog and was planning to use the BFD capability. Hmmm...

Drumagog BFD works pretty good with BFD 1.5. Don't waste your time with 2.0, IMO. the samples sound good. the interface is just waayyyy too ridiculously complicated and the midi loops suck if you want to use them. they are totally overdone/busy and must be extensively edited to be of any use at all.

somebody needs to make a larger version of the drumming monkey with the funny hat and big smile.

DJ, have a look at this thread on gearslutz about the Addictive Drums vs EZ
Drums..http://www.gearslutz.com/board/music-computers/182328
-addictive-drums-vs-ez-drummer.html

Trust me..These Drums Rock..
