Morgan-

I suspect everyone here on the NG would be very interested in Palmtree, from what I just read at the site.

-steve for those who haven't checked it out, they claim a new compression method that can maintain CD quality while reducing the file to half that of an mp3...

Good Morning Steve,

Yes - I believe this as well. A bit of back story here.
Delon Dotson was the CTO of MP3.com , while there developed MYMP3.com which later became known as Napster. He met with all the top record exec's at the time in a futile attempt to get them to understand the future.
Simply put - folks would get their music by downloading.
He was laughed out of all of their offices.

When Michael Robertson , then CEO of MP3.com and Hothead - insisted they go ahead and launch the first P2P site called MYMP3.com . Delon , a Christian and former attorney took a firm stand and said they simply could not just do this - it was wrong and it would be Piracy. Delon said if you do this - I'm selling my shares in MP3.com and I'm outta here - that's precisely what happened.

When I met Delon , He told me of his history and his Desire to Right the wrong so to speak.

Delon had an idea for a security codec and an new approach a file format that would be a fraction of the size of an MP3 file and have way better Audio quality . That's when I introduced him to Elliot and the now known  META Group consisting of all the top dogs from the Grammy Producer and Engineering wing. The Concept was to provide a secure way to sell  " Intellectual Property " via the web.
Along the way , the security codec portion eclipsed the actual value of the Audio Codec when it became clear to all involved that this had solved the identity theft problem. Delon was on the team that built the SSL encryption presently used by all online transactions etc... , the new security codec is a Quantum leap from that.

I think this is going to be a very interesting year :)
