Thanks! I have the web site book marked.

It has been a struggle to get back with the program. Three years ago my studio was robbed and it put me out of business. Plus, I went through a divorce; all within a two month period. Just now getting back on the horse. I got all my stuff back. But, a lot of it was broken in the theft ordeal. I just pushed everything into a corner and only recently started fixing things.

It's all good now.

Yep, I am. I already have one C16 and two EDS cards working and I'm ready to move up to a dual core XP system I am building. I even got a couple good jobs because I mentioned Paris in my ads and there seems to be a developing cult following of Paris.

Nashville always had a good PARIS base (I assume from your name you live there). I was there for 11 years before moving about a year ago and knew a handful of PARIS users that also seemed to either move or move on....but at least for the most part a lot of good engineers there know PARIS for what it is.

My week-end gig got canceled. But, I managed to scroung up a measly 5 hour job. So, I have enough to pay for the one C16.

I would still rather have the software than do the 3.0 download from the site. You would know because obviously you bought the software instead of doing the download. But, is there any advantage to having the disks over doing the download and what the heck is Pace anyway? Being old school, I would rather have something in my hand than a file on my computer. I am probably just being silly, wanting the original printed disks.

My old 2.1 on Windows 98 just continues to work problem free.
