This guys gets shot in the head, you see. Amazingly, he's still alive. They get him to the emergency room and the neurosurgeon looks at the Xray and says, "We can save this guy, but it will be a very long and difficult operation. It will be very risky, but I think we can do it"

They roll the patient in for surgery and get under way. It takes five hours of stabilizing the patient just enough so that they can attempt to remove the bullet. The doctor finally attaches the hemostat onto the shell and contemplates removing the thing from the patient's brain. He starts to sweat profusely, knowing that one wrong move could turn this guy's brain into oatmeal. Seeing his state, his nurse turns to him and says, "Relax doctor. It's not like we are making a Steely Dan record or anything."
