Heh, I find this amusing, and thought I'd share it with the group. This is a link to a band I'm currently drumming for (I'm not a drummer) - Forty Minutes of Hell. It's a pretty rowdy group, but all in fun, and when I started mixing it I goofed off with pushing the output of an EDS comp on the L/R buss. It is a bit sloppy, rude, and I'm sure there are slight clips here and there..... but it works for the band - and it's really freaking LOUD. Makes me laugh. So - don't play it for your kids, but some of you might appreciate it. The band's video on their myspace page is.... amusing too. :) ! ? And, if anyone's going down for sxsw, we'll be down around there then.

the album is here.... <http://www.carlamburn.com/fmoh.htm>

the myspace is here.... <http://www.myspace.com/fortyminutesofhell> rock on,

-Carl

I listened to a few of those clips, and I don't know if this is the reaction you were looking for, but it's pretty hilarious.

In a good way.

Awesome Neil. Yeah, this band is all about having crazy fun - I'd say you got it. I will say, the live shows are amazing though - it'll rock your balls off. The singer is an insane-go-nuts-Iggy-Pop-type, and very often injures himself.... it's a blast to watch. Attached is a photo from out last show - I setup a winch/harness rig and we hung the singer over the audience (all of 5' up) for the set. It was halloween, so he was an angel. :)

rock on,
-Carl

Hey Carl,

Your post and the photo take me back...

...smashing up cheap acoustic guitars, playing out in boxer shorts, audience members rolling around on a beer soaked floor "dancing," and whole bar rooms emptying out as the crowd went outside, circled the building, and did the bunny hop. Good clean fun :-)
