Steve,

I'd always stick with the easiest/cheapest solution first.

Check cables/connections should be #1.

Swapping/removing Meacs, cards and cables would #2.

Power supply would be #3 for me.=20

Tom

Hammer would be #4...

Don't you think that this could be a bit of an over-simplification?

Should we enter wars to show that we are not greedy?

But all that "money-making" you speak of provided the materiel to win the war! Then, we gave hundreds of thousands of lives and zillions of dollars to libreate europe so you all wouldn't have to live under Hitler and then later the USSR.

You have not been fair here, my friend. Would you like to compare what america spent on these wars versus what we made from programs like lend-lease?

You're wrong. It is not that simple, and cannot be reduced to such one-dimensional motives.

You are way off base here. You should come visit and learn more about these people you claim to understand so well. Your sources of information are polluted by bias.

But history contradicts you in each of these instances. Every time we specifically do NOT rule, though we could.

All the way from the Marshall plan to rebuild Europe, to rebuilding Japan, to rebilding Iraq, we have then left a democratic government in each place where one never existed before.

What really concerns me are the repetitions of these Marxist lies about the west every time some ghoul commits an act of terrorism.

This stuff is:

1. mostly lies
2. irrelevant.

Believe it or not, the murder of british civilians is NOT an opportunity for western breat-beating and the repetition of Marxist boilerplate.

As a matter of fact, I consider it unethical to throw this stuff up in this context.

The issue at hand is terrorism.

So, do we act evolved (as Jamie suggests) in the face of 10th century ghouls who would kill your family to get on the evening news, and repeat the pacifist lines about war always b

No, no lock tool. Just drug a .wav file into the track.

>Hey DC,

That makes both of us on the side of freedom. Enemies of freedom should watch out.

I'm not on the side of simplistic answers, though. Each situation is unique. While we can (and must) apply what we've learned from past situations, we would be foolish to assume too much and to attempt to fly on autopilot.

History shows that violence often leads directly to further violence. Examples abound. A canard it is not. However I doubt you are trying to advocate violence as the one and only method of influence for change. Clearly, use of force is a last resort fallback. A plan Z. Using it indicates failure in other methods of influence and risks unintended consequences leading to potential future problems and violence.

I agree that fascism is a danger and not just from Islamic radical fundamentalists. The price of freedom is eternal vigilance.

To quote our (pampered ivy league) president, "it's hard work!"

Cheers,

-Jamie

>He, he Don, I knew most of your answers on forehand and I generally over-simplicated my writings after my own thoughts since there have been som many coming here on this side for some years, talking like America was in war from the beginning in both worldwars we had the last century. It seems that plenty of you are eliminating or not knowing about these facts at all, that America wasn't lifting a hand the first three to four years and just want to talk about how glorious American saved the world in both wars. Yes, I know very well about the Marshall-help and all the other helping hands Europe have got up against the years, but most of you Americans had plenty of family in Europe and blood is allways thicker than water, as far as I remember. I know this very well by myself with the christmas packets we got here in Norway in the last half of the fourties and the fifties from family in America. It was allways American stars in our young eyes in those days:-) But as far as I remember, it was Europe and NorthAfrica and the far East that was in a warzone in the last worldwar, not any land in USA. The first time American country was directly involved in a warzone was 11sept, as far as I can remember, without thinking about the civil war between the North and South.

Someone wants allways to be a leader of a lands people, some of them can be really good for the people and some can be really bad. Bush is in my eyes showing up with mostly a bad moral for the people but is trying his best to show up with a a glorie with all his behavings for his friends in the big industries.

So, in a few words and again generally, I was just trying to say that we're all from the same human race here on this planet, with the same kind of stories with problems for both rich and poor all over the world and have done and is doing the same faults generations after generations, in the trying to find material richdom in something;-)

As far as I have seen, my behavings for the day have allways show up in the way for tomorrow.

So really take care of the day for yourself too, Don.

Erling, that simply isn't the case. What I was unhappy about was you using dead bombing victims as another opportunity to trash a country to do not understand, and everything you know about seems to come from Michael Moore. I certainly understood you.

So, you did it again!

Even more nonsense, accusations, and lies. This is your solution to Islamic terrorism... Maybe when they blow up your friends and family we can all talk about Norwegian racism and intolerance...

Swell.
