You do know that Avid owns Pinnacle that owns Steinberg right? Why design an audio engine when you can buy one?
And the PARIS or PT debate is OOOOLLLLLDDDDDD Actually, Yamaha now owns Steinberg.

Right click the e:\ drive in explorer, then the permissions tab (as long as the drive is formatted NTFS) add your account with full control, then remove everyone else.

>If you wanna go that route..... You could get a decent PT HD set up from the used market for about 14k or so.... and i am thinking with 2 or 3 cards depending on your i/o... of course then you'll probably need some plug-ins.

Here's what i did (along with some others)...

Get a 2nd computer

Put Nuendo on it (don't mess with SX unless you are really strapped for cash, Nuendo has some "pro" name recognition that SX probably won't ever have... that's if you care about that).

and get a couple uad-1's... and some urs, and tritone plugs.

get a rme hdsp 9652 (or something with 16 or 24 adat i/o).

for tracking.... plug into paris as you normally would but route the input to one of your adat outputs that feed nuendo. you will route your nuendo audio/midi tracks to paris and monitor them through paris... and monitor your overdub performer or whoever through paris also. you will have no latency while tracking to nuendo.

for mixing.... you can set up nuendo adat outs to feed paris. set up output busses in nuendo... drums, bass, vocals, etc... all running into paris. mix in nuendo with no uad-1 issues and other good plug ins, you can use your outboard in external inserts now too... when the mix is done... record those busses in one pass into paris... then do one more pass in paris to bounce to stereo. ask DJ about dither from 24 to 20 through adat lightpipe... sometimes you might want to do that on nuendo's outputs if the material calls for super, super smooth.

sounds like a lot but its not really.

i think its a good transition step to moving away from Paris someday... keeps the familiar and gets you used to another app... while still preserving all/alot of the Paris sound. maybe someday something will come out that allows you to get the same sonic result with a computer as Paris does (summing box, neve sidecar w/summing, ssl sidecar w/summing)... then your ready to move to it.

my $.03,

Jeremy

<http://www.ParisFAQs.com>That's worth looking into.

Thanks!

I remembered another glitch this morning. One of my banking sites that always worked fine with it stopped displaying the accounts.

They would load and then poof, disappear. P
