I don't want to start another religious or political thread - I just found this ironic, at best:

The Pope is under fire from the Islamic community because he quoted a Byzantine emperor's ancient writings in a talk rejecting religious motivation for violence. The emperor, in obscure writings hundreds of year old, characterized the teachings of Muhammad (Islam's founder) as "evil and inhuman" because of his command to "spread by the sword the faith". The Pope made no such characterization - just quoted the old guy, and it isn't even clear if he quoted any of the "offensive" text.

As a protest, two Catholic, two Anglican, and one Greek church in the West Bank were attacked by Palestinians using guns, firebombs and lighter fluid - charring the churches and riddling them with bullet holes.

Umm...reality check:  $2+2=4$ . The Earth still circles the Sun. And doesn't reacting with violence just prove the Emperor's assessment, and then some? Yet the press and the Islamic world seem to have missed the irony of this response, or at least are reluctant to admit it.

The Pope's comment is getting more press than the fact that violence was actually perpetrated when the churches were torched. To note, this was a response, not a crime.

Why are we (the world culture) so quick to defend Islam and work so hard to avoid offending Muslims, regardless of the cost - even if it means rewriting the definitions of peace and violence? Just something to think about....

Ignorance isn't bliss, it's the last step one takes before falling off of a cliff.

Back to music...

I recall a similar irony, if that's the right word, during the Danish cartoon flap: Muslim fanatics using violence to protest the implication that Islam is a violent religion. Is it possible they didn't realize they were proving the validity of the cartoons? Hard to believe.

Unfortunately, Osama bin Laden and others have much of the Muslim world convinced that the US is engaged in a war on Islam. Even more unfortunately, I think for some this actually is an unspoken motive in our "war on terror."

To paraphrase John Lennon: imagine . . . no religion.

Sigh,

Apparently it's an abomination to Islam to discuss whether or not Mohammed said anything other than what a few *chosen* mullas decide is OK. I still find it disturbingly amazing that those on the left in this country are so friggin blind that they don't see what is in store for them if they win the ideological struggle that is going on in this country and in doing so, further empower the very antithesis of everything they believe in.

Take a good look at what is happening. It is not Bush's fault. It started long before Bush took office. It is the natural progression of the radical Islamic agenda to use *any* excuse to jump up and down like a bunch of automations, shoot guns in the air and burn things whilst blithering a bunch of racist, hate driven nonsense.

Coming soon to a *Sudetenland* near you.

These are frightening times. While the true neocons in the current administration have had a variety of political, financial and power-based reasons for perusing the war against Iraq, the president has had an even scarier motivation.

Religion.

If you missed it, this week Bush has announced the "Third Great Awakening" of the international religious struggle. This is a good thing as he sees it and it has been partially brought on by the new fight against terrorists as "a confrontation between good and evil."

In 2001 he used the word "crusade" and got into quite a bit of trouble (as has the Pope), but he seems to have the gloves off now.

Can anyone imagine a worse direction for the world to be headed?

Of course he also believes in the Rapture, so things could easily go down hill from here.

Gene, that's absurd. You just passed the 5-year anniversary of the worst attack on americans in history, and you can't even grant the president the motive of protecting the rest of us?

Agree with him or not, like his methods or not, do you really think it fair to discredit both his clearly stated motive and the reasoning behind it in favor of anti-christian paranoia?

Lincoln lived during the 2nd awakening and often used "good vs. evil" as a part of his reasoning as well. Would you be frightened of him as well?

Can only atheists be president?

Where is the specific evidence for the motivations you assign to Bush?

Can you not call the jihadis "evil"?

as do I (at least for the moment). This is not just about religious fervor, boats in the water. If I am right, this is the most dangerous period in our history.

But to my point, this is also from the Washington Post:

Another Rapture writer says he advises White House

by Dan Froomkin, Washington Post

Aug. 4, 2006

Joel C. Rosenberg, who writes Christian apocalyptic fiction, told me in an interview this week that he was invited to a White House Bible study group last year to talk about current events and biblical prophecy.

Rosenberg said that on February 10, 2005, he came to speak to a "couple dozen" touch with several of them since.

Rosenberg wouldn't say exactly what was discussed. "The meeting itself was off the record, as you could imagine," he said. He declined to name the staffer he said invited him or describe the attendees in any way other than to say that the president was not among them. "I can't imagine they'd want to talk about it," he said.

"I can't tell you that the people that I spoke with agree with me, or believe that prophecy can really help you understand what will happen next in the Middle East, but I'm not surprised that they're intrigued."

The White House press office wasn't able to confirm the visit for me, but there have been previous reports about White House Bible study groups inviting Christian authors to come speak.

Apocalyptic advice:

Aug. 12, 2003:

Apocalypse preacher says Bush administration solicits his advice

Aug. 17, 2003:

Rice briefs 'Christian Zionists'
on Mideast peace plan

May 18, 2004:

White House checked with rapture Christians before latest Israel move

Aug. 8, 2006:

Cheering for apocalypse, evangelical lunatics counsel Bush White House

Rapture radicals

Bush and the fundamentalists

Rosenberg says he got a call last year from a White House staffer.

"He said 'A lot of people over here are reading your novels, and they're intrigued that these things keep on happening ... . Your novels keep foreshadowing actual coming events. ... And so we're curious, how are you doing it? What's the secret? Why don't you come over and walk us through the story behind these novels?' So I did."

about the apocalypse. The consistent theme is that certain current events presage the end times, the Rapture, and the return of Jesus Christ. Rosenberg's particular pitch to journalists is that his books come true.

Here he is in a recent interview with Christian talk-show host Pat Robertson , talking about what he thinks is going to happen next: "Now I have to say, says He's going to supernaturally judge Iran, Sudan, Lebanon, Syria, these other countries. We're talking about fire from heaven, a massive earthquake. It's going to be devastating and tragic. But I believe that afterwards there's going to be a great spiritual awakening. We're seeing more Muslims coming to Christ right now than at any other time in history. But I think that's just the beginning. We've got dark days ahead of us. But I believe there's a light at the end of that tunnel."

Rosenberg says he got a call last year from a White House staffer. "He said 'A lot of people over here are reading your novels, and they're intrigued that these things keep on happening ... . Your novels keep foreshadowing actual coming events. ... And so we're curious, how are you doing it? What's the secret? Why don't you come over and walk us through the story behind these novels?' So I did."

Judy Keen first wrote back in October 2002, in USA Today, that "some White House staffers have been meeting weekly at hour-long prayer and Bible study sessions."

Gene,

If I actually believed this, I might agree with you. We've certainly disagreed on a number of issues like this but I respect your opinion. I'm sincerely interested to know if this is for real. I've got no problem with people practicing their faith but I do believe that faith in something (like armageddon) can definitely bring it about. I've read a number of articles discussing these things you bring up here, but the sources were easily as fanatical as they purported Bush to be.

I agree that we may be living in the most dangerous time in the history of the human race, but I don't see the same villain that you do.

There is not just one villain, there are plenty of villains. Saddam Hussein,

As a US citizen, I feel like I have been put on the list by the unconscionable actions of our government.

if not hundreds of thousands of innocent people in the name of bringing them and put them to death without ever showing any evidence, why not.

Well I do have a problem. It is NOT OK.

I want my country back.

It was never perfect. No country ever was, but we stood for something great, even if we sometimes had less than stellar moments. I know in my heart that if the Founding Fathers of the United States were alive today they would be calling for impeachment or revolution.

presidents that were deeply religious, but if he thinks that all the wars and problems we are having in the world are actually a good thing because they have ignited a resurgence in Christian Values, we are in deep shit.

Gene, maybe I am misunderstanding what you are saying, but it sounds like you are saying that Bush is starting and wants a religious war. I think you may be confused. Other people have already started the religious war.

Look in to the sixth and seventh pillar of Islam, some where in there it speaks of living by the sword. In other words, if you don't convert, you are to die. I for one do not believe they are civil or peaceful people.

There has not been peace among those people for thousands of years, and now THEY have sucked us in.

They would be nothing in the middle east, but the Communists, Russia and China, supplied all these third world countries with tons of weapons! Now they can make bombs and wage war. Now they know how to make nuclear bombs that can take out US cities. Look at the middle east, south America, North Korea and the mess all across the continent of Africa. Evil people gave more evil people weapons to fight wars with. This has created a world problem, and the Communist want to keep supplying them with weapons and technology.
I know, here comes the liberals with, we gave them weapons too. Think about it, where did this start?

I'm no fan of Bush, but it's just too easy, and unfair to say it's all Bush's fault.

I will say however, the War in Iraq was completely mishandled. Just do the math, one hundred and fifty thousand troops to take care of thirty five million people plus, and thousands of miles of open boarder, in a place the size of California. With five million troops, maybe??? I believe Bush and his friends wanted to be there for years and make all kinds of money on this war. He has created a bigger problem by not taking care of Iraq quickly. There is a lot of blame to go around in our federal government, it's not just one man.

As far as the war on terror, people should be honest with themselves. you can't negotiate a war. there is no diplomatic solution to a war. If you stop to talk, they reinforce, rebuild, and reorganize for more war. Or did we forget the lessons of the past.

In the end, bombs can never stop idealism. The problem is the people that want Jihad will not stop. Peace will never be lasting with these people, it's in their nature to be waring. They think they will be rewarded if they kill and die in the name of Islam. So how do you fix it?

We are more concerned with terrorist rights than doing the job we need to do. When they hit us, we'll have to take them out, make no mistake, it's going to get serious. When they kill millions of americans, blame the spineless politicians that wanted to talk things out and find political solutions instead of facing the hard truth, we are at WAR. We should take care of the problems now, but we are just too weak as a nation. Really think about why we are weak as a nation, and where the blame should go.

Gene -

You probably didn't realize it (so no offense), but your response pretty much confirms my assertion that the tendency of our country and even the world society, is to place blame for religious conflict, violence and religiously motivated terrorism anywhere but with the single largest growing, and currently most violent religion in the world. We ignore car bombings, suicide bombers, torched churches, thousands of tortured and murdered, exiled and ostracized people in favor of blaming the administration for anything and everything, as if Bush made the Pope quote a Byzantine emperor by going to war in Iraq.

Islam isn't the passive, peaceful, non-threatening, all-accepting religion our country seems to blindly want to believe. Some western Muslims might be, but just ask anyone who tried to believe in anything else in many of the conservative Islamic countries of the world. I know, have talked to, and have heard missionaries to these countries speak - it's a different world from the free discussions and widely varying opinions we have here. People die for converting to anything else, or their families do. At best, their families disown them and they sneak out of the country under threat of death. In fact it's the exact opposite of the "freedom" our country continually pushes the limits of. Odd that we would turn on our own country in favor of supporting, or at least turning a blind eye to this kind of ideology, somehow believing that is the more politically correct thing to do.

The problem I see isn't religion, but a lack of faith in God, and hence any sense of direction and moral guidance. God gives us the choice to believe or not. Based on documents of their activities - in the name of Allah the 9/11 terrorists pretty much broke every one of the 10 commandments in 24 hours. That may seem a trivial or even silly fact, but there is a sad, and frightening irony there. Faith in God isn't what one should fear - it's believing in anything that conveniently appeases one's personal whims that is the true danger.... the terrorists proved that in one day. That also includes believing in nothing.

As Blaise Pascal once said (paraphrased): if one believes in God and is wrong, at worst one has lived a good life and had some false hope as a sense of comfort along the way; if one doesn't believe and is wrong, then at best, all is lost for eternity. This is the paradox that we should be considering, and yet the most fear-inducing thought is that the President might believe in something other than nothing. Is no belief really better than belief? What reference point for right and wrong accompanies disbelief in anything higher than one's own decisions? What reference point for respect for other people's beliefs accompanies a lack of belief in any guideline for living life and having respect and compassion for others?

It isn't the administration's fault that the Pope quoted a guy Islam doesn't like just because he called like he saw it - something we do on this forum every single day, ironically. It also isn't Christianity's intent to take over the world, or the government. Far from it. The only goal is to give people a chance to decide. Yet, those that want to decide to not believe would rather take that right away and remove Christianity from public view. The only way to force someone to remove their belief from public in a country that promotes the freedom to believe as one wishes, is to outlaw it. Yet another paradox.

Through our short sighted political glasses we want to see the world as a black and white, free-will, partisan vote where one's party always wins and the decisions are always in our favor, but fail to see any validity in believing a God that gave us the very moral compass to maintain the balance that kind of choice affords us. In essence we put our trust in the very thing we prove day in and day out to be one of the most fallible characteristics of humanity - political and relativistic ideology.

I guess I ignored my own first comment....sorry about that.

I should get back to mourning NI Battery 2's destruction of 10 hours of work :-((....

Dedric

Gene, I too respect your opinion.

I do ask you to look at another viewpoint.

I do consider yours, despite disagreeing with it often.

>As a US citizen, I feel like I have been put on the list by the unconscionable >actions of our government.

There is no torture, not by any sane definition of the word.

Human Rights Watch recently defined putting an terrorist in a cold room, and blasting them with Red Hot Chili Peppers as torture. Hilarious. Abu Ghraib? Hazing rituals compared to Saddam, and the perps went to jail!

>Start wars without cause,

Now you know a case can be made for that war, don't you? Don't agree? Fine, but don't assume it does not exist.

>OK, cause the deaths of tens of thousands >if not hundreds of thousands of innocent people in the name of bringing them >freedom, no problem.

We spend millions of dollars on accurate weapons so we can kill the fewest innocents of any war in history, to liberate 25 million people, and this is how you characterize it? Again this just isn't a fair representation.

Never happened. In fact, the eavesdropping of international calls, made by likely terrorists, which was completely legal to do, and provided valuable information, was revealed by the NY Times, in an act of treason (to many of us). No one is opening your mail.

>have trials and find people guilty >and put them to death without ever showing any evidence, why not.

Where did this happen? First, the Geneva Conventions *explicitly* exclude spies and saboteurs from protection, and governments regularly have executed them without being charged under the GC's, so how do you figure that jihadi are covered?

Do you think you and your loved ones are at risk from these people? If you don't, why not?

>Well I do have a problem. It is NOT OK.

>I want my country back.

Yeah, and I want to go see Bird and Diz on 52nd st. and meet a hot dame there.

Your country is a pre-9/11 one and I do not argue with you because I like arguing, nor do I wish to offend you, since I actually quite like you. But I am convinced that your views would result in my family being put in terrible danger. I cannot remain silent.

We will face jihadis, and we would if Ghandi himself were president. They have revealed themselves to us, for the past 30 years, to be the scum they are. To believe that they can be negotiated with, has to be beyond the pale today.

I wish it were otherwise.

>It was never perfect. No country ever was, but we stood for something great, >even if we sometimes had less than stellar moments. I know in my heart that

This is an interesting point. They were very wary of "foreign entanglements" but they also went to North Africa and fought the Barbary Pirates so that the seas would be safe, so I am not sure you are right on this.

They would certainly barely recognize our country though. Liberal, big-govt. would have horrified them for certain; surely you realize this?

>presidents that were deeply religious, but if he thinks that all the wars >and problems we are having in the world are actually a good thing because >they have ignited a resurgence in Christian Values, we are in deep shit.

I agree, but where is the *evidence* that he makes his decisions based upon those things? He's such a cautious man in so many ways. Don't believe me? Remember the "moral equivlence" argument that idiots like Ward Churchill make? That we are all "little eichmanns" participating in this great evil?

OK, so assume for a moment that we are morally equivalent to Al Queda. Now, what would we have done the morning of 9/12/01?

Think about it! All those subs, all those missiles, all those nukes.

Green glass in Kabul, green glass in Baghdad, same in Tehran, same in Damascus. Then Bush gets on TV and says: "who's next"? That's moral equivalence my friend, and frankly it's what those bastards would do to us if they could.

Instead, Bush tries to foment democracy, and he believes in it so much that he pays to do it the slow and painful way when he could have punched the big red button, and converted the survivors at gunpoint.

As a Christian, I can tell you that the Bible *at no point* says that we are to start wars and kill people to bring about armageddon. There are idiots who believe such things, but those named in the article you quoted are not among them, and those beliefs are not widely held among us. Believing it to be soon, is very different from trying to make it happen.

James,

statement:

Please help me define what the problem is. Is it Muslims? Just some Muslims?
Which ones?

What about North Korea? They are not Muslims, but they are first (or perhaps things. Pakistan is Muslim and they have several bombs. They have just signed a treaty with the Taliban, and they are hiding the real person that caused 9/11, where is the outrage against Osama bin Laden and the people protecting him?

How about the Non-Aligned Movement. Over 100 countries banding together with Cuba or Venezuela?

Now that we have succeeded in alienating ourselves from the majority of the world, should we see them all as threats? Almost all of our allies are abandoning us, or at the least distancing themselves from us. The only real leader left is on our side is Tony Blair, and he has been summarily dismissed by his own party. With him out and anti-American sentiment running high in Great Britain, who do we have left?

I never said it was all Bushes fault. He just took a relatively unheard of small time international criminal/terrorist (Osama bin Laden) and turned him into an international movement to destroy the US.

At a level of 1.2 billion, Muslims represent about 22% of the world's population. They are the second largest religion in the world. Only Christianity is larger, with 33% of the world's inhabitants. Islam is growing about 2.9% per year. This is faster than the total world population which increases about 2.3% annually. It is thus attracting a progressively larger percentage of the world's population.

Peace to all

I don't know if I'm a "leftie" (or a hippie for that matter), but I do know I'm definitely not blind. And here's another thing I'm not -- I'm not an idiot.

Not being an idiot enables me to reason beyond simplistic black-or-white logic. In doing so, what I find "disturbingly amazing" is this oft repeated nonsense that if I don't support Bush's Crusade, I support the terrorists.

NEWS FLASH: Scientists have concluded that there may be MORE than TWO approaches to the problem of terrorism. This should come as a relief to those who have believed that our only options are: 1. wage war on Islamic countries, or 2. do nothing. Yes, folks, there may be other possibilities in between those two extremes, as the recent thwarted terror plot in Britain demonstrates.

"OK, smart-ass, what about Iran?" you may be asking about now. Yes, what about Iran? Shall we leave Iraq in the toilet and try the same thing in Iran and hope for a different result? Isn't that the definition of insanity? OK, you say, what if Iran gets a nuke or two? Yeah, what if? Do you think they're going to guarantee their own obliteration by lobbing nukes into Israel? Or what? Isn't it possible that Iran notices that we haven't even threatened to attack North Korea, the neglected "Axis of Evil" sibling? Perhaps Iran is thinking, "If we have nukes, the US won't dare invade us." That would be a logical conclusion on their part, don't you think? If Iran is financing terror, we're going to need the help of our allies, if we have any left, to deal with them. We're also going to need leaders a lot smarter and more honest than the one's we've got.

Here's a thought -- it occurs to me that in fighting the Nazis, Communism, and now Terrorism that our real consistent enemy in all these is brutal authoritarianism, AKA totalitarianism: we don't cotton to anyone trying to violently force their beliefs upon everyone else. Well, wake up and smell the despots, gang, because in our blind terror of Islamic extremists, we're allowing the very thing we fight against to creep into our own government. And this is proven every time someone is accused of "appeasing the terrorists" because they oppose the "war" in Iraq.

Look, once and for all -- NOBODY LIKES TERRORISTS, OK? Except other terrorists. But this doesn't mean we should continue to let insane people lead the charge against them.

Love,

Sarah

One man's obvious truth is another man's propoganda.

Factual truth is not the same as spin. Whatever you believe, (I'm not speaking here of you specifically, Chris, but anyone), if you think people who disagree with you are simply blind, you may be experiencing confirmation bias.

A possible treatment for this is to find a friend who disagrees with you, sit down with them, and really listen to their reasoning. Hold your knee-jerk responses in check. Then find another friend with another point of view and do the same. If you are particularly brave, talk with strangers. You don't have to lose your point of view, but use these conversations as an opportunity to drop any internal defensive system and try, for a moment, to see things from someone else's point of view without promoting your own. It's a healthy brain exercise. We may find it's easier to love others when we operate from inclusively rather than defensive insecurity.

Those of us who live in free countries MUST live with disagreement. Disagreement makes free systems much stronger than systems that rigidly enforce a single point of view, because free systems examine problems from more than one perspective. The best solutions may come from a combination of perspectives. At the very least there will be more solutions from which to choose.

It's therefore healthy that we can have disagreements and enjoy discussions to explore them.

It's just as important that within these discussions at least some listening take place. If it's all mere preaching to respective exclusive choirs then it becomes a sort of babble.

I think most people can agree that fanatical, power hungry ideologues attempting to recruit others to kill for them are a danger to civilized society.

If an authority figure encourages a person to feel cornered and desperate, and then asks for his support in the context of that fear, the person could willingly become a pawn to the authority figure's aims. The person could, through manipulation of his own confirmation bias, feel rewarded by following a movement, even a destructive movement.

Confirmation bias is a reward within the brain when you find information that seems to support your own beliefs while generally ignoring even factual information that contradicts what you believe. From there the human talent of rationalization can kick in with the ability to feel smug and superior over those who "simply cannot see." And thus we don our own ironic blinders.

It can happen to anyone anywhere. It appears to be one of the trailer hitches on the human brain by which you can be towed willingly along while believing you are the driver.

It makes us susceptible, even receptive, to half-truths and even outright lies. We can be misled by scapegoating. Herded by pride. Become parrots of spin and stake our lives on propaganda.

Fanatical nationalism, fanatical religious fervor, these can be harnessed as Machiavellian tools by con artists, wannabe kings, despots, technocrats and theocrats alike. It can happen anywhere.

We are not immune, but we are stronger by having a culture of free thinking, respectful listening and vigorous discussion. Still, we are NOT immune.

The price of freedom is eternal vigilance.

Hi Sarah,

No one said you had to support Bush to not support terrorists, at least I never did. It really doesn't help your argument to use sarcasm though.

I am referring to the ideology that has been growing in our country for many years - way before Bush 1, or Reagan for that matter. It has nothing to do with Bush 2. I was talking about the world's view of Islam in light of the Pope's comments, so the fact that he keeps coming up as the response, regardless of the original topic, just shows that we would rather blame Bush than address what is happening in the world and in our country's ideology - the people, not the government. The government has nothing to do with the belief systems and relativism that is pervading our culture, media, schools, streets, conversations - it's just a side topic for Monday morning water cooler talk by pale comparison - one that ebbs and flows in the tide of that ideology of the people.

After Bush leaves office I believe we will see the greatest surge of relativistic and chaotic thinking in our history as a reaction of counter-instinct. It isn't about supporting Bush, and I'm not "blaming" the coming reaction on a lack of support for Bush - I couldn't care less if you like him - it's been coming regardless. I don't hate Bush, but I don't like him as a President either. I support our country though and want to see it become a great and revered nation solely for it's commitment to caring about and aiding people that can't help themselves, but that is probably wishful thinking.

I can see past the political fears and ideology to understand that we were also in serious danger during Reagan's years (Russia), Bush 1, and Clinton too as terrorism worked on plans for 9/11 and more that we've since averted, simply because the FBI, CIA and other police are on the vigil more than before. We created the political climate we live with administration after administration - one of deals and compromise to keep the right people happy. It's better than many alternatives, but in way it just propagates a lack of significant positive change in exchange for subtly slow moral decay, since it in and of itself, and our competitive commerce driven society promotes a lack of integrity. Until people (everyone, not just leaders) are willing to risk money, careers, notoriety and stability to stand for something of more substance than sustaining the nice house, car and happy-go-lucky lifestyle we enjoy here, we will continue to cower to the whims of politics and the special interest flavor of the day instead.

I do agree that there is more than one way to fight terrorism - yes, 3, 4 5, maybe 100,000,000. Waging "war" on Islam isn't the answer. But assuming this terror war is simply another political disagreement that can be diplomatically solved with embargos and slaps on the wrist by the UN is also overly optimistic - if only, really I wish it were. I'm not saying you think it is - just making a point.

Truthfully, I don't believe we will ever "win" the war on terror, or rather the ideology that is behind it. We will just delay it for a few years here and there over the next 10, 20, maybe more if we are lucky. But, eventually we will lose, and lose badly, simply because we as a nation don't have an ideology that is stronger, more grounded, and more committed than theirs.

Then again, we really are fighting the wrong war, and I'm not referring to Iraq.

Regards,
Dedric

Hi Dedic,

No, you didn't say I had to support Bush to not support terrorists . . . but that attitude is still out there, unfortunately, and some of the responses to your original post reminded me of that. My initial response to you was in complete agreement.

And I don't really disagree with anything you've said here except that I don't think relativism is quite the threat you seem to see it as. Most people don't take relativism to the extreme of justifying suicide bombers. Also, rejecting ethnocentrism doesn't make one a cultural relativist, speaking for myself. There is a middle ground there.

As for the sarcasm, sorry about that, but it helps me to diffuse my anger about these issues.

Near the end of this post, you said, "But, eventually we will lose, and lose badly, simply because we as a nation don't have an ideology that is stronger, more grounded, and more committed than theirs." I think we do have a stronger, more grounded, more committed ideology than theirs. It involves concepts like unity, integrity, honesty, democracy, and, as we all recited with hands on hearts in grade school, with liberty and justice for all. These are sky high ideals that our country is found upon, and the reason I get so angry and sarcastic is because it upsets me to see us drift steadily away from those ideals.

Hi Sarah,

I'm probably being overly pessimistic due to lack of sleep. How ideology plays out over the long term is a bit unknown (as in, I really don't know - just gut feeling), but I hope you are right: that as a world community we will diminish the threat from Al Qaeda, if not terrorism in general.

As to relativism - I probably do make it sound more prevalent than it is - I can't claim to have a broad enough scope for that to be any more than conjecture. I actually wasn't inferring that relativism does, or would ever justify suicide bombers, and I don't know anyone in this country who does. Relativism to me is more about the tide of overall softening of values for the sake of redefining social acceptability. It really is mainly about values and morals, rather than cultural change, though they could be considered of the same family, or even one in the same from time to time.

There are a lot of great people in this country regardless of widely varying beliefs, and you are right - we have a lot of fortitude and desire to maintain the freedoms and quality of life we have here. That's the cool aspect of this forum - even though we all disagree from time to time, we do have that in common - we want our country to be a great place to live, work, raise a family, play, etc, and that is an encouraging common theme in most of these threads.

Regards,
Dedric

As long as we all have been yakking on these subjects, three things have happened.

1. No one switched sides
2. Everyone learned something
3. Almost all of us have gotten much more skilled in being nice to each other despite our differences.

I don't know about the rest of you, but I am going to declare victory and have a beer...

The real irony here is that the head of the Catholic Church would dare to criticize anybody, ever, for spreading religion with violence and brutality.

That is some serious irony right there.

Good observations DC.

And if this newsgroup were put in charge of the country:

1. We would disagree on whether the White House comps would be PCs or Macs.
2. Cabinet meetings would refer to Marshall, Ampeg, etc.
3. Lobbying would refer to the noon jam session in the lobby
4. Bipartisan would mean we decided on both PC and Mac.
5. ProTools would mysteriously fall out of favor

(what? no, we would never do that...)

The idea that one needs to believe in a god in order to have a strong morals is absurd, I think.

Hey Jimmy,

No doubt one can be a good person without believing in God - there are tons of great people with no faith, or very little. That in and of itself tells me there must be a God so even non-believers would have a strong sense of right and wrong on a societal and even global level.

To walk through some thoughts: with no God, or higher reference point, what would be considered moral, or at least good? What would one use to decide what is right and wrong?

Laws? Most would agree that we can't legislate morality now, so with no basis for what morality is, why would we even bother with laws since everyone would make their own choices anyway?

Intellect? That would simply depend on what one chose to accept as "intelligent" thought, based completely on opinion.

Reasoning and Logic? Logic is determined by a hypothesis that has a proven outcome in a given situation. Change the situation, and the reasoning or logic behind the "right" or "wrong" could easily change.

Experience? What if one's experience is filled with hatred, abuse, anger and violence, or worse? Then someone would have to decide whose experience we would use as a reference point. There would be no guarantee that person or persons had experiences that would be best for the good of the whole.

Survival instinct? If it were a reference point, then stealing, lying, cheating and even killing would be perfectly justified as those can be means of survival.

Why would right and wrong even exist? I would think that the differences between societies' definitions of right and wrong, assuming societies even existed, would be so drastic we would never have ventured into any form of inter-cultural/inter-geographic interaction, much less relationships, diplomacy, collaboration, trade, and open travel.

As long as "morals" are only relative to each individual, they aren't absolute morals that would last longer than the time it takes to make the choice. We would just have 6.5 billion opinions. There would only be an ever changing perspective on what seems to "make sense" at the time, and based on this premise, even "making sense" would vary from person to person, day to day, minute to minute. In that case, our prisons would either be filled with innocent people simply judged "wrong" at the time because their choices didn't match the preferences of the majority; or we wouldn't have prisons, or likely even organized societies.

But is the majority always right? How would we know if there were no absolutes that supercede the majority in some form?

If there were no right and wrong, there would be no consequences of either, or at least we wouldn't view the outcome as a good or bad consequence - it would just be another event in time.

But by grace and as a gift of freedom, God gave us a choice, both in whether to believe in Him and whether to make right or wrong decisions. With moral absolutes (God's word) as a reference we have a way to evaluate drastically differing situations on an equivalent basis; with consistency in reasoning and compassion; by choice and instinct rather than puppetry. Even when we choose to do wrong, He is willing to forgive us. Without that option to choose, balanced by God's grace and forgiveness, there would be no power in choosing to believe in Him. That's what makes God a personal and loving God rather than a dictator or puppet master.

Odd as it may seem to anyone who doesn't believe, I can see God in the way that 1) we as a group of intelligent people on this forum can discuss completely opposing opinions and still care enough to consider insulting, belittling, slandering and hating one another an intolerable concept; and 2) in all likelihood agree that peace and compassion completely trump greed and power in importance to life and survival together on this planet.

Dedric

Faith is complete trust or confidence in something or someone. Religious faith is one form of faith but not the only definition of "faith."

For example I have faith that if I drop a guitar pick it will find its way to the floor based on the gravitational attraction it has to the planet. I have faith that I'll breathe my next breath, that I'll see tomorrow morning. I have faith that other people are put together much like I am and that I can therefore relate to other folks.

Without faith, people would not invest money. Without faith people would not vote. Without faith people would not start businesses, hire other people, raise children. Without faith people would not ride trains, fly in planes or drive cars. Without faith no one would investigate scientific questions about reality.

While you can clearly have faith without religion, you cannot have religion without faith. Religion depends on faith that one or more deities (good and sometimes bad) exist, that their associated stories actually occurred, and often, that there is some sort of afterlife.

However, religious people believe in a variety of different deities. Even those who believe in the same deity disagree, sometimes violently, about the nature of their deity. Religions sometimes even disagree about the nature of reality. If you want to base morality strictly on religion, and you look around, you'll notice that religion can be a somewhat chaotic basis unless...

Ah, you might say, I want to base morality on MY religion. Well, you just dissed the majority of religions. No problem because THEY ARE WRONG. And people who believe in those religions may just be saying the same thing about you and your religion. For those religions who are not tolerant of other ideas, you may just have started a war.

So perhaps it's BETTER, in our time, to have a system of justice that is NOT based on a religion. But one which guarantees everyone the right to practice the religion of their choice, guarantees other freedoms such as we in the USA do in our Bill of Rights, encourages honesty and integrity, while enforcing some common sense limits such as no human sacrifices, a minimum age for marriage, no incest, no slavery, no murder, no rape, no stealing, those sorts of things.

What is viewed as morality beyond a fair justice system and common sense rules of behavior can be left to each freely chosen religion to sort out, like whether to restrict diet in some way, whether to wear a certain type of clothing, how to pray, etc. But none of these additional practices should be imposed on society as a whole.

The Golden Rule may also be of use as a basic moral foundation.

So yes, you can have a moral system, one that BTW protects the freedom to practice religious beliefs (or not), without basing it on any one religion. And it can protect all religions better than a system based on any one religion (AKA a theocracy).

There are other issues surrounding religions, such as the many examples of selfless dedication to helping others on the one hand, and hijacked religions used to legitimize earthly power structures in other cases.

Dedric, I look forward to talking with you about the positives and negatives of various religions, and where a moral culture ought to go from here, whenever we next get together.

Cheers,

-Jamie

Hi Jamie,

While those are certainly good examples of the common definition of faith,, we shouldn't confuse faith in God with trust that event B will follow event A. The latter can also easily be attributed to learned behavior. But not all aspects of faith in God can be seen or experienced.

Hebrews 11:1

What is faith? It is the confident assurance that what we hope for is going to happen. It is the evidence of things we cannot yet see.

And no doubt that can apply to a falling guitar pick, though I doubt you hope that will happen during a gig. ;-)

How does one believe that there is life after death though, or that God is sovereign even over devastating situations? That is where the faith I refer to comes into play. And I would also propose that the same sense of faith we use to start a business, or enter into marriage, or believe that we'll see the next day, is part of the desire and drive that God has designed in us to propel us forward, and draw us to Him as well. It is a part of being human - a feeling, thinking, growing, individual.

The point was that moral absolutes aren't based on religion, and wouldn't be moral absolutes if they were. The idea of God-defined absolutes excludes the possibility that man could create or change that absolute.

By saying that man creates absolutes based on his religions says that his religion is false (created by that man), and therefore, no belief has any absolutes, and all beliefs are relative only to a single individual at a single point in time. We could extrapolate that to whether murder, rape and other acts we consider "hideous", but would have to conclude that all are right and none are wrong. The reason being that we would only be viewing them through our own created "right and wrong" and not anyone else's. That would also extrapolate to terrorists that kill people believing that it is Allah's will to destroy those that oppose them. But obviously we don't believe that is "right" any more than we believe Charles Manson was "right" to do what he did.

So where do we get the foundation for a "fair justice system" and "common sense"? If we have no reference point, then we must have just made it up. In that case, it's only relative to our perspective, and is neither right or wrong to anyone else, and maybe not all of the time for us either. If we created right and wrong, and we aren't perfect, then there is nothing stopping us from changing the rules when it suits us individually, regardless of the impact on others. Without that sense of governing authority that outlasts our governments, what holds us to be by very nature mostly "good", by most any definition?

What makes all of our choices seem to follow a similar core value system? If we have no common thread of belief in what is right and wrong, then why do most people (and likely all, even extremist terrorists) prefer peace to war; love instead of hate; fairness instead of injustice; truth instead of deceit? If there is nothing connecting us and superceding our own locally relative decision process, then how could we have any sense of "common sense", much less right and wrong?

We see the evidence of these everyday. We easily agree as a world culture for the most part (excepting obvious deviations), that murder is wrong; stealing is wrong; laws should be obeyed, not abolished; etc. That is the evidence of unseen, never globally written in stone, but always pervasive moral absolutes. So in reality we all have faith that moral absolutes do exist, and if no individual created them (by the hypothesis that relativism would make them irrelevant), and all mankind just happen to adopt and hear about them without actual communication to propagate those beliefs, where did they come from if not from God?

Regards,
Dedric

My point is that faith is necessary for life, with or without religion. Faith in a deity, faith in an afterlife, these are certainly examples of faith. My point is that faith is not exclusive to religion.

Nor is a moral basis, a system of justice - these are necessary for civilization, again with or without religion. Religion is fairly useful in construction such a system, to the point that religions have been invented to help cement power and define social organization. But that doesn't mean a religion, or a universally acknowledged deity, is required for that role.

It may be that you are having trouble groking the idea of morality without a deity because you have so tightly associated the two in your life, which is totally understandable. But what you propose is begging the question. Others can make the distinction, and maybe it's worth the effort to understand why.

There are many perspectives. For example a social libertarian perspective. You own yourself. What you do with yourself is your choice until and unless it interferes with someone else's ownership of their own person. You can derive the rest from there. This is a pretty strong start which certainly can allow for a law-based free society, including religious freedom.

We are into a deep subject which is better discussed in person when people are willing to both talk and listen, as I have faith we are. :^)

I may be missing some of your intended points and I suspect we may be talking past each other somewhat in email. So since we don't live all that far apart, let's get together soon, explore the topic over a beer, and see what we come up with.

Cheers,

Hey Dedic,

I think I can answer your last question (i.e., where did our "moral absolutes" come from if not from God?). I don't murder because I don't want to be murdered. I don't steal because I don't want to be stolen from. I don't lie because I don't want to be lied to. And so on. I have faith that most human beings have an innate sense of "goodness," but I believe in laws just so a society has written agreement on what behaviour is unacceptable. That way, we're protected against those who may be out of touch with their own personal "sense of goodness." I do believe, though, that the worst among us are basically good underneath their rage and pain.

I watched an HBO documentary the other night called, "The Iceman and the Psychiatrist," about imprisoned serial killer/hit man Richard Kuklinski and his attempt to better understand his nature with the help of a shrink. What really struck me as I watched and listened to this terrifying man is that I still felt that inside the monster was still a flicker of that distant

"inate goodness."

It seems as though what I think of as inate goodness is what you call God, and that works for me. I think it's possible, though, that the "inate goodness" came from millennia of learning the hard way how not to live together with other humans. Even at that, though, one could argue that it was our "God-given" intelligence which allowed that moral evolution.

The only problem I have with using the word "God" in any discussion of morals, reality, etc., is that there are too many different ideas of who, what, or if God is. Thus "God" becomes kind of a short cut, a metaphor for pretty much anything that transcends human understanding.

Perhaps as a courtesy to others involved in a discussion, if one is going to use the word "God," one should include a definition of the term. For example, if by "God" you mean the inate awareness of good that connects all of us spiritually, I'm down wit dat. If by "God" you mean a Big Guy in the Sky who fries his own "children" in a lake of fire, I'm probably going to ask questions, like, "Well, um . . . does he have a penis?"

Love,

Sarah

The Unholy Alliance Rolls Over the Pope

The Catholic church doesn't speak for Christianity. Certainly not for Lutherans, and for good reason.

A Pope criticizing other religions (even other Christian sects, even other Catholics) is nothing new. Certainly much harsher things have been said about Islam by some (not all) extreme fundamentalist Christians. And certainly much harsher things have been said by certain extremist Islamists about Christianity. The more extremist of both camps seem to be spoiling to relive the crusades. With some of the more power hungry ready to endanger civilization by attempting to incite religious wars for their own questionable ends.

It's a vast generalization to say the "the left" or "secularists" or even "Christians" are demanding an apology from the Pope. I think a whole lot of people think the Pope can say whatever he wants. It doesn't matter to most non-Catholics in the USA and in reality, Papal declarations are ignored by a fair number of Catholics here, too. Obviously some Moslems are upset in some places, but how deep does that go? When black churches were burning in the USA, it would have been an exaggeration to blame everyone in the USA for that.

The fear of reason extends to the Catholic church which only very recently apologized for the oppression of Galileo. The church hung on tenaciously to the dogma of an earth-centered view of the universe while denying the heliocentric theory of Copernicus, which describes the actual way the solar system works.

It also extends to a few Christian sects who, feeling similarly insecure, tenaciously cling to the notion that the earth is only about 6,000 years old, by virtue of the biblical interpretations and clever (at the time) calculations of an Irish Bishop several centuries ago, and in the face of solid current scientific evidence to the contrary.

The fear of reason extends to some (not all) Christian churches who, feeling similarly insecure, deny the solid and ever-mounting evidence of evolution, responding with dogma in pseudo-scientific clothing, and who seek to water down scientific education in the USA.

The fear of reason extends to power hungry industries who pay big bucks to spread denial about global warming for short term gain. Who push to control oil in the middle east with force. With our guns blazing, our soldiers dying and our debt rising astronomically. And who sometimes hide behind Christianity to do so.

The fear of reason extends to some neoconservatives who find ways to pretend that everyone is aligning against Christianity. And in spreading this fear attempt to incite Christians to vote to keep them in power. And in so pandering, help to continue the denial of reason and the focus on the use of force.

Not that I'll change your mind, DC, so go ahead and declare victory. ;^)

Have a great week!

Cheers,

Here, read this! The war with America started on 9/11.

Now how do we stop them? Talk to them, apologize to them, convert to Islam?
Do you want to convert to Islam?

Let's keep from reacting to irrationality with irrationality of our own.
There's a lot of fear mongering. Chicken Little is back.

The key word is group.

A group of neo-Nazis won seats in this weeks elections in Germany.

http://www.nytimes.com/2006/09/17/world/europe/17cnd-germany.html?\_r=1&hp&ex=1158552000&en=ae34ff540e2ea150&ei=5094&partner=homepage&oref=slogin

This group does not speak for all Germans.

A recent NYT article talks about the infiltration of the US Army with skinheads.

of your skin.

<http://select.nytimes.com/gst/abstract.html?res=F50713FE3B540C748CDDAE0894DE404482&showabstract=1>

This group does not speak for all members of the Armed Services or all Americans.

The world is filled with small groups of extremists, even here in the USA. The trick when dealing with them is to stop them without turning them into figureheads or martyrs. Our blundering has had the opposite effect.

On 9/11 a small group of extremists who were basically seen as outcasts by the majority of the Muslim world attacked our country. Our actions since have doubled and doubled again the scope and severity of this problem.

I am afraid you are right, if we continue on our current course we will turn this into a world war.

You're confusing 'faith' with 'a willingness to take risks.' Animals take risks, to get food, create more animals, etc., but I doubt they have faith. One needs no faith to start businesses, invest money, get married, etc.

I haven't seen us react with irrationality.....yet. Al Quaeda just came out with an ultimatum stating that it's full on war now and the west will be destroyed. The only way to save ourselves is to convert to Islam. So where to you draw the line between irrationality and self defense?

Hi Dedic,

Don't take my comments as an indication that I have no "faith" in a higher power, but couldn't our ability to feel empathy be one possible reason that the majority of people might have similar morals. I don't think an atheist knows murder is wrong just because god said "thou shalt not kill". I think the golden rule has a lot to do with it. Over time, we have learned as empathetic beings what is ultimately right and wrong. At least in the very broad sense. Now, how we got to the point where we feel such a vast number of emotions and are able to apply them to how we treat others is something else to ponder.

I don't think we are going to have a choice. WHEN they take out a couple of American cities, will you still believe in talk? Will you care what the rest of the world thinks of us?

We should have crossed the border in to Pakistan and got Bin laden, now what? Their not going to stop. The people or countries that harbor al-Qaida are the enemies of the US. The head of the CIA said that they have a "vary excellent idea of where Osama Bin laden is", but for political reasons they can't go get him. So who do you think is protecting him?

There is a lot more I could say, but the bottom line is we don't have the guts to do what is necessary. There are too many people in our country that are weak minded and weak willed. They know they can destroy us because our people are weak and divided.

Think about who has been against us the whole way. There is a much bigger picture.

Just to be clear, my definition of victory was "not fighting", rather than my having won the argument.

Someone is right here, and someone is wrong. If I am right, you and some others will have some serious crow to eat. If you are right, likewise for me and some others.

There is a point at which it is clear that no minds will change.
We have reached that point.

In the future, I would like us to commiserate together, rather than say "I told you so" because the possible result of either position could just **SUCK** huh?

Hence the "declaration".

ps

Good friend of mine, (not a bushie by any means) dared to ask some of his friends what their plan was, should the jihadis, not the president, show themselves to be the real issue here. these antiwar folks (long time friends of his BTW)literally started yelling, spluttering and *chanting slogans* in his face! We have avoided that. That is a victory.

So have a beer, and consider if the other guy has a point.

A purely pragmatic question.

If the worst happens and a WMD goes off in a major US city, what would the appropriate response be?

answer.

ourselves, but if the responsible people are a small percentage of the population of a country or region, what should we do? Nuke the Middle East?

This is the time we should be talking about it. If we wait till it happens we will be caught up in the moment and we could make decisions that literally end civilization.

I lost friends on 9/11. I have not forgotten. However, I do not blame innocent people for the actions of others.

The problem, of course, is that without a belief in moral absolutes, reflecting realities designed into us by our creator, anyone can say "who cares" to any social construct, contract, set of mutual obligations, or anthropological observation that morals do indeed exist.

In fact, one is invited to do so by an ideology that places humankind, not God at the center of existence. When the self is the center of the universe, one easily decides that someone else's morals and ideas of a social contract are an illusion. Worse, ideas about morals may even put them at a competitive disadvantage compared to the person who has none. (welcome to the music biz!)

This result is likely given that set of assumptions, but it becomes inevitable one you go down the road of the neo-darwinists and socio-biologists who assert that humanity is simply a vehicle for furthering our "selfish genes" rather than a created being made to live in community with God and each other.

The theist (and certainly the Christian) must always live in submission to a greater power, never being the center of existence, and deriving morality from a higher power than the self. Humility is our greatest calling, one I fail at regularly, but still, it is there.

Without God, all is permitted.

Of course they came out with a blustery ultimatum. That's not news, it's an old pattern. It works for them to sit back and suggest that others do something via terror-grams such as this. If it makes you afraid as well, my guess is they would see that as a bonus.

By goading the USA into overreacting it helps them grow, raise money and convince others to actually see us as evil and act accordingly. It works, we keep falling for it. OTOH, for those here with a declared interest in emptying the US treasury, it's likewise beneficial to have the specter of an enemy out there. Fear sells.

We have yet to actually declare war on anyone in this whole mess. How do you declare war on a tactic?

Forced conversion and head taxes would go over like a lead balloon in the USA. Not gonna happen. We're far more sectarian than, say, Iraq.

Responsible leadership is needed in the world to calm extremist tendencies on all sides and help rational people who are trying to get by in worsening times. At the same time we need to be, and are attempting to be, vigilant against any self righteous group with fantasies of violence in the USA.

Any rush to some sort of "holy war" is irrational. There is nothing holy about war.

"Without God, all is permitted."

A few questions about that assertion:

- 1) Which God? Your God or anyone's God? If your God, are you then asking for everyone to convert? If everyone doesn't convert will there be a head tax on those who don't?
- 2) When considering the non-deity case, why should we assume a sociopath as the arbiter of morality?
- 3) Pretty much all HAS been permitted in the name of a deity at one time or another. Sociopaths are not limited to the non-religious. How would you deal with religious sociopaths acting in the name of declared morality?

Hi Don,

I'm not in the same league with you to debate theology. I'll try to state my feelings in the most coherent way, but it will be, at best, clumsy. The problem, from my point of view, with relying on "God" to dictate morality is that every different religion believes their God is the one true God (or God's in some cases). Evidently, fundamentalist Islam's God says it's completely moral and beyond that, an Islamic's duty to kill infidels. So, who's God's morals should all of mankind follow. You say yours. They say theirs. I can only follow what I believe to be true in my own heart. I feel that I can still have faith in something beyond myself (God) and faith that for what ever reason, I have the ability to sense right from wrong. Perhaps the one true God gave us that ability.? Obviously people do say "who cares" to the accepted social moral standards all the time. If not, we wouldn't have any murder, theft, rape, etc. But by and large, I think the majority of people know in their hearts the difference between right and wrong, regardless of what God they follow or weather they believe in God at all.

Here's dictionary.com

faith; /fe#618;&#952;/ Pronunciation Key - Show Spelled Pronunciation[feyth]
Pronunciation Key - Show IPA Pronunciation

1. confidence or trust in a person or thing: faith in another's ability.

2. belief that is not based on proof: He had faith that the hypothesis would be substantiated by fact.
3. belief in God or in the doctrines or teachings of religion: the firm faith of the Pilgrims.
4. belief in anything, as a code of ethics, standards of merit, etc.: to be of the same faith with someone concerning honesty.
5. a system of religious belief: the Christian faith; the Jewish faith.
6. the obligation of loyalty or fidelity to a person, promise, engagement, etc.: Failure to appear would be breaking faith.
7. the observance of this obligation; fidelity to one's promise, oath, allegiance, etc.: He was the only one who proved his faith during our recent troubles.
8. Christian Theology. the trust in God and in His promises as made through Christ and the Scriptures by which humans are justified or saved.

I don't see anything in there about risk. My point is that people can do the things you're talking about knowing full well they might fail, but do them anyway. That's taking a risk, not having faith. I don't have faith but I've taken lots of personal and professional risks in my life.

I don't see us overreacting Jamie. However, if there is indication of some sort of major threat, do we run and tell the NY times or do we blow the threat away before it pays us a visit?

Tony,

I think you did pretty well, actually.

"Which God to follow" can be a sincere question, as in:
"it makes sense to me that God would have a plan for our lives and wants the best for us, and I need to know who God really is" or it can be rhetoric, from a clear atheist position, as in:

"well, there's a god over here and there's a god over there, and another one in Boston, and how are we to know which god is the right one?"

and the person really believes in no God whatsoever.

The difference is important because if one believes in a creator, it is reasonable to assume that the creator is interested in him as well.
This, at least is the Christian position, and the Bible and certainly the life of Christ centers on the issue of "who cares about humans anyway?"

Well, John 3:16 answers that doesn't it, and while secularist reasoning can be shown to be utterly self-referential and even irrational, in the end spiritual things are spiritually discerned and if someone simply wishes to dispute, they may do so, forever.

So, as a Christian, believing that Jesus came to save me, and that the Bible narrative, while not perfect in the details, nonetheless contains His story. I would say on that basis, that the God of the Bible is the right one, and I would say that the muslims are mistaken and do not serve God at all. "By their fruits you will know them"

*However* there is the obvious case of the righteous Muslim, Buddhist, Hindu etc. I do believe that the imprint of our creation exists in all of us, granting even the atheist a conscience, despite their basic antipathy to absolutes. Beyond that, I also believe that God turns no one away, so there is the mystery of those who seek God in their own culture and their own religion, clearly *finding* Him!

We are responsible for what we know, not what the other guy knows.

That doesn't make faiths all equal or the same.

BTW, the case can be made that ANY theistic belief is superior to atheism and neo-darwinism, simply because it gives at least some basis for universal morality.

What about the righteous atheist? Well, there are a few of these, and I think some of them have been called by God to do good despite their ideology and that thing they follow that they call "conscience" is in reality the Holy Spirit and they may be saved on the basis of their reaction to that voice of God. I also think that denominations generally thoroughly *suck* (good theological term eh?) and have driven away many righteous people who live without religion in a righteous manner. I do believe they are all called to join the rest of us at some point, but I will not pretend to judge them, nor Hindus, Muslims etc on when that is.

Brain Welch (Head) from Korn became a Christian a while back, and evidently has a new tune called "Religion Must Die" and I think he has a point. Take a look at his new site. I like the music.

<http://www.headtochrist.com/>

Of course, whatever emerges from the death of religion, even if it is the most dynamic Christian community since the 1st century, will be called 'religion' by the secularists who so dominate our culture, so it's semantics to some extent.

Deej, good lord amighty, if we go around blowing away every perceived threat to us, we're gonna be dropping a lot of bombs on a lot of people. Where should we start? Seriously? How many countries shall we bomb back to the stone age in an attempt to rid the world of potential threats? How many civil wars shall we create and get bogged down in to appease our more war-like citizens? Cuz last time I checked, there were easily half 3 or 4 dangerous states posing a much greater economic and/or military threat to us and our allies than Iraq recently did.

And speaking of Iraq, how the hell are we ever gonna spare the man-power to fight other countries while we are so severely over-taxed in Iraq? Is it any accident that Iran has been so loud and obnoxious recently? They know we are compromised tactically. They laugh loud and long every day at our current difficulties.

Any of you guys ever bone up on the last 60 years or so of Arabic/Persian history? We've been playing with fire for a long time now, as far as I can tell. Seems to me that part of the current problem is that a lot of skeletons in our national closet are coming to light. I certainly don't condone the radical Islamic fringe that seems to have it in for us, but folks in the Mideast in general have a few good reasons to profoundly resent our beloved U.S.A. Would I like to erase the earth of all religious and political fundamentalism? Hell yes. I'd also like us to get really, really, serious about not meddling in the affairs of other people in a decades-long effort to influence the price of oil.

Only the ones Bush promotes on Fox News.

Easy, there. Must be careful not to imply that Fox "News" is quite literally a propaganda arm of the current administration. That's just gonna open up a whole can of worms about how the NYTimes is a tool of the Devil, sent to this earth to make life difficult for our dear sainted leader, who was in turn appointed to the Presidency by the Lord himself...

Neither, actually. And what we ought to do would depend on the nature of the threat.

We might want to start with recommendations published in 1999, well before the 9/11 attack.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/National\_Commission\_on\_Terrorism

We can disagree about whether our current policy is one of overreacting or not. We can probably really disagree about the newly minted preemptive attack policy. :^)

There you go, clearly faith is not limited to religion. Although just as clearly it's important for religion.

As to risk, many people have faith that their risks will pan out. Some people do things because they have such faith. I know people like that. I am people like that. That doesn't preclude anyone from doing something for some other reason, of course.

If you want to say you don't have faith in anything, using any of the definitions below, then that's your prerogative and I don't have a problem with that.

Dude, that is so in line with my thoughts on organized religion that you might be a long lost brother. As a kid I spent a lot of time in a small town church where I was told that God was, essentially, a must-fear mean old man type. I haven't spent a lot of time near that particular sect since I was able to 'not' be around it. I'm not too sure about all these 'we welcome all thinking and religion as ok' types either. There's got to be some kind of middle ground theology out there, I just haven't found it yet.

I never said faith was limited to religion _at all_ because that would be silly. I only bring this up because I think it's a very important point. Nearly every time you read 'without faith there would be no XXXXXXXX' it's just not true and XXXXXXXX can get along just fine without faith. Probably the best popular book about risk is called 'Against the Gods' and it's sort of about this very topic.

I don't think there is any newly minted attack policy. There has always been the *clear and present danger* perogative but it needs to be based on accurate intelligence. Had this been available, then I doubt that Bush, Kerry, Kennedy Pelosi and the rest would have authorized the invasion of Iraq, or perhaps they would have been able to find the WMD's before they were shipped out of the country or hidden. I just find it hard to stomach the hypocrisy of the democrats whose policies neutered our intelligence services in the '90's when they trun around and blame Bush for the decisions made based on the intellegence blunders they created in the first place.

Thanks for the link. It looks like it might be a more interesting read than what you might expect of a book on probability theory.

Without risk management there would be no insurance.

Seems like we have some major risk management headaches ahead in the foreign relations area. I don't have much faith that our current government understands the situation or is capable of brokering a lasting and beneficial peace.

Cheers,

There is plenty of finger pointing to go around. No doubt specific things could have been handled better under the previous government.

The transition of power between the previous and current governments was pretty rocky, and a "not invented here" syndrome may have doomed the hand-off of some al-Qaida related work that was in progress.

In any case, no government gets a pass by blaming the previous government. The current government, for example, failed to follow through and prioritize the al-Qaida threat ahead of 9/11 and failed to prevent 9/11; failed to find and capture Bin Laden in Afghanistan; failed to overcome Taliban control of large areas of Afghanistan; allowed record drug production to reestablish itself there; failed to plan for post Iraq invasion problems predicted by their own state department; and they have continually exploited the "war on terrorism" for domestic political ends.

You assert the WMDs were there. However Bush's chief inspector, and Bush himself, say they weren't there after all. It was a bluff. One of the Iraqi expatriate promoters of the bluff got the ear of our government, was believed, and, last I heard, had parlayed it into a position of power in Iraq after the invasion.

The dems you mentioned authorized the military attack on Iraq as a last resort and I don't believe they were satisfied it was done as such.

Preemptive invasion is new as part of the "Bush (Jr.) Doctrine."

Cheers,

With all due respect ulfiyya, the general consensus here is that anyone can discuss anything they feel like discussing. This group has morphed into more of a gathering place for PARIS users and former users. An online coffee house as such. The key for you is to simply skip the topics you don't want to read.

The dems you mentioned authorized the military attack on Iraq as a last resort and I don't believe they were satisfied it was done as such.

How convenient for them when it was the intelligence service that they created over 8 years of hard work that they now attempt to slag and blame for their decisions so they can vote for the war before they vote against it.

by one party. It doesn't bother me if you want to point blame at some of the policies under Clinton. But again, merely pointing fingers backwards in no way excuses the mistakes and failures of the current government.

They walked in stating in clear terms that they felt the previous government was wrong about almost everything, and then fell flat overall, domestically and internationally.

Looking at both governments, we can do better. We must do better. At some point, and we're coming up on six years, the buck stops with those in charge now.

Rick,

Do you think it would help if we could just figure out a way to get into the UN gallery (do they have a gallery?) and then start mooning people? I want to do something constructive instead of sitting around bitching all the time.

The Dems are completely screwed because they _at least_ rolled over to a one. On the whole program, from start to finish. People forget Patriot I was Clinton legislation in reaction to Oklahoma City, Patriot II just took another nibble at what (little) was left of the constitution.

Unlike most people, I was a loud critic of this war _before_ it started. This was because I know what the US has done previously in Southeast Asia, Central America, and so on. We've invaded nearly every country south of the Mexican border at least twice, some more. The Dominican Republic had Marines there five time in the twentieth century, a country that couldn't defeat the Albany PD on a good day. Every time we've invaded another country it was to save it from a) itself or b) the evil empire. After reading in the 1980's about the terrifying strategic threats posed by Guatemala, Grenada, Nicaragua, and Panama I decided I'd be a bit skeptical henceforth.

But I remember seeing two of the most prominent Dems, Joe Lieberman and Hillary Clinton, on TV in the run up the war. Both were demanding to know why Bush hadn't invaded Iraq already. Why we weren't using bigger bombs on more people far faster etc. and so forth. And I said to myself, 'Well, that's the end of the Democratic party.' And it's hard to feel terribly nostalgic for it.

And, as you say Deej, now all effort is being made to blame the CIA because if we don't blame them we might actually blame the cringing sycophants we elected to represent We the People in Congress Assembled. Ironically it was the CIA that was most cautious about the Iraq war. The CIA may be a bunch of loathesome spooks who the US would assassinate if they did to us what they do to other countries in our name, but that doesn't make them wrong or stupid.

But I always say, think of two things about the current various wars on terror. Who at the very least paid for the training and equipping of Osama and his boys? During the brutal ten year Iran-Iraq war, did the US support one side with money or military equipment, and if so which side?

Both parties should pay for what they've done, neither will,

Our situation is directly related to the fact that our leaders based their decisions on disinformation that was a result of the policies of the Clinton administration. I'm not pointing the finger backwards for any other reason than I feel it is important to keep this in mind lest we elect the same misguided souls with the same naive and misguided foreign policy ideas to office once again and end up in an even bigger mess.....and yes.....it could be much bigger if the liberals take control of the national legislature.....much less, god forbid, having another Clinton in the white House.

Our situation is directly related to more than half a century of our decisions and actions, smart and stupid.

It's of limited usefulness to hone in on the last administration as if that's the entire problem, surely you would have to take into account decisions made before then and since then.

So while I agree with your point to an extent, it's insufficient to inoculate the current admin from its own significant problems.

Bill and George aren't running again so we don't have to argue that one. I am not writing off either major party or a third party, but we need a change on many levels.

Cheers,

-Jamie

So...you're blaming the situation in Iraq on Bill Clinton? Is that right?

Cuz that seems absurd to me.

Just sayin'.

Hi Jimmy,

No offense taken here. My point is that we are finishing a war that was started by Sadaam, not Bush. It was never brought to any conclusion because the sanctions that were put in place to do this were circumvented and this was during Clinton's administration. Clinton also instituted a policy wherein our CIA couldn't work with anyone who had any taint of human rights abuses and also did everything they could to keep the various intelligence service and the domestic intelligence services from sharing information.

All

of these things played a huge part in what happened on 9-11 and the crappy intelligence was what we based the decision on to go in and finish the gulf war that Sadaam started. Had we accurate intelligence, I'll bet things would have been handled much differently. You may not agree with this and that's OK. I'm not going to flog it anymore or Kim's gonna get pissed off at me and

I might die.

I've said my piece here. If you want to discuss this off the group it's animix@animas.net.

Regards,

Deej

Iraq by invading it and "nation building" it into an ally. That certainly had nothing to do with Clinton's administration. The general consensus on the part of most reasonable folk is that Iraq was a dead-center target for Bush, et al, loooooong before he got elected.

Frankly, I gave them the benefit of the doubt as the invasion occurred. I said to myself, maybe they're right. Maybe we win, things shift in the Mid-East, we're all happier. Didn't work out that way.

We didn't have to do it. Fact is, certain now-powerful neo-cons had been fantasizing about it for a decade or more when Bush took office, and they seized the opportunity and made it happen. And because of that, we're up to our necks in a global firestorm of hate and civil war and over-extension and tactical weakness.

Any attempt to lay all of this at the feet of anybody other than the current administration seems awfully wrong-headed to me. Just seems like desperation, ideological desperation.

God help us if we find ourselves routinely torturing people in order to preserve our way of life. God help us. That's not who I want to be. I'll leave this country before that becomes commonplace. I won't be party to the torture of other humans in order to preserve for ourselves cheap gas and relative safety from those who have learned to hate us at least PARTLY because we have been manipulating their governments, their history, their economies and their lives for decades solely to keep a steady flow of cheap oil.

I despise the destruction of innocent lives. Be clear on that. And I love my country above all else. But I will not be a hypocrite, and I will not be bullied into hard-partisan faux-patriotism. I fear we are losing our grip, as a nation, on what it means to be an American. It is a fear that seizes my heart like a clammy premonition of impending doom. I hope I am wrong.....

BTW, if we want to win this war on conservative terms, we need to show everybody right now how we will deal with those who harbor non-traditional combatants in their midsts, whether it's Lebanon or Pakistan or Syria or Iran: we nuke them. Just the major cities. Warn folks a few days before we drop the hammer, give 'em time to get out.

That's how we won WWII, more or less. Anything less isn't going to work. Anything less is the worst sort of wishy-washy hypocrisy. War is hell, and anything less than hell isn't war. End of discussion.

Over and out.

Jimmy,

did it ever occur to you that someone was actually paying some attention to Iraq and what was happening there, even when Clinton wasn't? Considering the intelligence assessments (or lack thereof) I would think that any potential leader of this country might be thinking ahead. "W" would have a special interest I'll grant you, since his father's administration was the one who organized the war and was instrumental in putting together the sanctions that were ignored by the world. How that is portrayed by 36354567645 million pundits with an agenda (including you and me, of course) is a matter of speculation.
