And without it being in public, they could edit anything and make it look real while he is on an island with hookers, a tivo and a personal chef.

Trust but verify !

What the hell is this!?

Bad enough that you cross the line of decency in a childish, name calling hissy fit; even worse that you don't have the balls to post under your real name.

I would normally not give this kind of thing the time of day, especially if it were aimed at me, but your reaction to someone else's differing Political slant is pathetic, and needs to be called so.

Don, the NYT was one of the largest outlets for pre-war, pro-war propaganda in the US media. Judith Miller pretty much staffed the print media desk for the Office of Special Plans and the Cheney Brigade, while the editorial staff beat the war drums like Philly Joe Jones--fast and loud. Like so many Monday morning geopolitical quarterbacks who played a game or two of Risk back in the day, they have supported every militarily aggressive move by the US or Israel that I can recall. When it became obvious that Miller had been supremely duped and the war wasn't going well, they VERY VERY slowly came around to the moderately critical stance they have now. Even today, with the exception of the honest Paul Krugman, the editorial page is relentlessly pro-war in that neo-dem, we have to look 'tough on security' kind of way.

As for Saddam, few alive were more deserving of the walk down that plank and the snap of the neck. But anyone who aided, abetted, and bankrolled his crimes against humanity (that would include anyone who paid US income taxes in the 1980's, among many others) should pause to think a bit as well.

Do you read the NYT editorial page? I ask because I do, almost every day, because it's delivered to my office.

To quote Sonny Boy Williamson, you can take it as your mammy if you want to.

Start by being, oh, let's say slightly credible with your assertions and we can talk.

It was a joke... Give it a rest. No one is going to change their views on this stuff because you and get into a debate. Or you could go all anonymous on us... nah... boring.

Thad, don't bother Don with facts. He's probably just channeling some windbag talk show host pushing YAGF (yet another gloat frenzy).

Probably the one who likes to pretend he's objective but clearly isn't, while at the same time loudly accusing other media of bias. Sheesh.

Cheers,

There is nothing so laughably ironic as an accusation of "fantasy" in the mouth of a partisan of the Right.

The only fantasy exposed here is this shopworn 'Liberal Media Ripped my Flesh' riff. No doubt, this noise will grow increasingly strident in the months ahead, as it becomes clear to all but the most deluded that, as American Clusterfucks go, this invasion ranks near the very top.

But hey, you know what? "The media done it." Just like in the last clusterfuck.

The media. The liberal bleeding hearts. The pussies. It's their fault. If only Real Men had been allowed to run with the ball. A couple of Christian divisions armed with tactical nukes and by now there would be nothing left to do except hand out the chocolate bars. The oil would continue to flow westward, America would once again run the planet on God's behalf. Suddenly it's 1957 again. Say, is that Fred MacMurray over there?

yeah.it's easy enough to google anything isn't it?

<http://stateoftheday.blogspot.com/2006/09/whom-would-hitler-shake-hands-with.html>

It's typical that this site attacks Rumsfeld while twisting the truth of the situation. Rumsfeld wasn't appeasing Sadaam, but Chamberlain was certainly appeasing Hitler. Alliances shift.....especially when they are alliances of convenience and this is done often in international politics. It's ugly, but it's a fact of international politics. The point that this site tries to make is so idiotically naive (but in this case simply self serving of the site's agenda).

anyway.....I can see where this is going and neither of us is likely to change the other's mind. I'll wager though that the fleeting pity that we felt, for whatever reason, is more than Sadaam ever felt when feeding people feet first into a wood chipper.

Regards,

Deej

This url was not part of my post; I have not examined or endorsed the views held by the blogger. Why you are choosing to include them here is a mystery to me.

Oh, okay. Got it. Alliances shift. Things get done through manoeuvring and manipulation against a background of deals, arrangements, alliances, payoffs, betrayals. Everybody plays hardball, and the US, as the WOR Superpower, likely plays hardest of all.

This is an admission, one can only conclude, that the unceasing histrionic promotion of America's mission to bring democracy to the benighted little peoples of the world, all the high-flown arias to justice and freedom and goodness, and the symbolism...all the flag-waving and pledging and the engraved monuments and the medals and the flypasts and the patriotic songs, in short, the project to deify the American Idea, all this is pure propaganda (if you're an innocent) or pure hypocrisy (if you're not).In short, it's all meaningless. A lie. Because...well...alliances shift, don't they.

And whatever the dubious value of the word of other countries, America's word, at least, is by these admissions, worthless.
What you are admitting is that, as the putative leader of the world, the US presides over a system devoid of honor and justice, and marked instead by convenient alliances, betrayal, blackmail, coercion, murder, cronyism, torture, economic genocide, war profiteering, illegal arms running, subversion/emasculaton of domestic law, the aiding and abetting of bloody tyrants and terrorist organizations, thwarting of international law, etc., etc.. etc. And that's all just business as usual from an American standpoint. Just bizness. 'Cause alliances shift.

You excuse American agents like the execrable Rumsfeld and others when it comes to alliances of convenience, and other temporary and odious arrangements, yet I have seen you bitterly denounce the French in particular for just this kind of self-interested backroom realpolitik right here on these pages. At least the French are circumspect about it. They don't try to convince the world or themselves that what they do is ordained by God for the greater glory of all His chilluns. Hell no. They do what they do on behalf of their own Oligarchy (just as the American government does), except they don't conjure up phoney, self-agrandizing names for their efforts, like say...oh, Operation Enduring Freedom, is one that springs to mind (?????.you've got to be kidding.)

So while you and Don are somberly remembering all those poor Iraqis that Saddam 'liquidated' to use the term favoured by your Central Intelligence Agency, you might also considering remembering, belatedly, the mountains of bodies produced elsewhere over the years by other governments who enjoyed 'alliances of convenience' with yours.....Suharto, the Shah, Marcos, Mobutu, Duarte, Somoza, Pinochet....there are literally dozens of them, and hundreds of thousands of victims. And you might conclude that the roaring noise you hear in the background when your president says 'they hate our freedoms' is the ironic, in many cases desperate, laughter of the world's millions, laughing that they do not weep at the utter shameful mendacity of it all. Also, you might remember the half-million Iraqi children whose deaths your Sec of State considered a fair price to pay for furthering US policy. A half million! Can you imagine a half million AMERICAN children dead from want of food and medicine, as the result of an administrative decision? Can you imagine American reaction to a foreign official, Putin, let's say, shrugging his shoulders and saying too bad....a convenience.....get over it. Alliances shift.

>anyway.....I can see where this is going and neither of us is

Yup. You and Don are morally superior to Saddam Hussein. It's a start. I never doubted that YOU were, actually, but for Don it could be the start of something big. lol. (Just kidding, big guy! How's that new plectrum working out?)

Hello Bunuel, how are you?

Have you slept well for some times, you greatest troll of them all, here on the Paris-site? ;-)

A Happy New Year to you too!-)

Hi ,
When is the time for others?
Like Bush , Sharon ,Blair and so....
The killed also and still killed poeple in Amerika , Afghanistan ,Palestina
You most now the history and now where you talking about before give youre opinion about other poeple or country.
Remember Hiroshima and others.
I'm curieus about the reactions.

Happy new year!!!

I don't give a **** whether or not you have "sanctified" anything with your "endorsement". Read it and tell me you disagree. If you do, then we've perhaps got something to talk about, if not, then you are categorized, and killfiled.

...well.....sometimes when we don't we have to throw some invader out of anything at all to do with integrity either migrated to Quebec or were Yeah Bunel, as a Frenchman .(or at least an rank Frankophile) you should understand this. Look in the mirror and something shifty will certainly appear.

The French, circumspect?.....no.they are not circumspect. They are perfidious and obvious and despite your verbal diraha above, you just dropped them into the same cesspool that you ascribe to American motives.except you think it is better to be circumspect.....LOW, to slither under the radar to further their own interests while prolonging the bloodthirsty dictatorship of Sadaam for 10 years and allowed his to continue slaughte3ring his people. How many palaces did he build. How many arms and munitions did he uy. How many people could he have fed with your blood money Bunel?

Nope.....you can't rewrite this one amigo. It's on your ass like stink on to use the term favoured by your Central Intelligence

Yeah, they were sorta like Sadaam. Why don't you take a look at the mountains of bodies produced by Hitler and Stalin and the Gulags perpetuated by their subsequent successors and leftist regimes. Let's take a look at Mao and Castro while we're at it and since you are so good at speculation, why don't you speculate on what might have happened if these monsters were running those countries. You spew this garbage while conveniently ignoring that there was a much greater power struggle going on. At your request, we helped keep these assholes off your doorstep for 40 years. Have you ever been up close and personal with a shooting war? Maybe you have. I was living in central America in the 70's and 80's saw both sides of the shit going down in both Nicaragua and El Salvador. The Castroites were every bit as bloody and ruthless as the other side and despite the one sided reporting by the press, the people there hated them too. They murdered thousands of people. I saw some of it.

And you might conclude that the roaring noise you

- > hear in the background when your president says 'they hate our freedoms'

- > laughing that they do not weep at the utter shameful mendacity of it all.

Yeah.that's why there are immigrants just beating down our doors to get out of here. Speaking of shameless mendacity, why don't you read up a bit on French colonial rule and the things your precious country is capable of doing.? .....and BTW, it seems that the natives are getting pretty restless in your neck of the woods. You might want to think about that the next time they light up another city or two.

Nope, this is your bag to hold and you held it for 10 years.

A half

- > million! Can you imagine a half million AMERICAN children dead from want

Excuse me, but you must have mistaken the administration that made this decision and that would be the French. As far as myu imagining half a million American children dead. Yes, I can. I imagine it every day and I think it will happen because there are leftists in our government and media who are willing to do anything for power and also because more than half the people here (if you believe the polls) do not believe we are in a war. It's just gonna take one nuke. I'm sure you will enjoy that until they nuke you and we aren't around anymore to pull your ass out of the fire.

Can you

I can certainly imagine this.....Putin and Chirac have already done it.

Well.....so far I haven't fed anything into a wood chipper but wood.

It's a lot easier to just hate than it is to have an intelligent conversation.

Pot calling kettle? Your lack of respect for anyone who disagrees with you politically is clear in this post and even in some of your "jokes." It's odd, because you're not a dumb guy.

We're all free to have our opinions, Don, even ironic self righteous grumbling about what you may perceive as self righteous grumbling.

Your gear posts are generally more cogent than the talking points and ad hominem stances you sometimes serve up in political threads, but thanks for adding your flavors to the stew.

Cheers,

Uh huh. I guess so. Whatever.

Okay. Until next time Don sez something stupid, then.
Happy New Year!

And you are the reason, you and Erlilo, and the rest who think like you, that Europe is headed for Eurabia.

Want to save yourselves?

Notice that none of these is written from a Christian perspective.

Consider, and hope, that the Bible is wrong, because if it is right, for you things get much worse than the articles above present.

You can call me names, you can conflate Hiroshima with terrorism, you can act as superior as you like, but your culture is dying, and somewhere in your superior hearts, you suspect I am right. That's what is so great about freedom. I can stand up, in the very faces of the self-righteous, and tell the truth.

I am right, and it's probably too late for you. At minimum, I have a damn RIGHT to dissent from you and should be treated as respectfully as I have treated you. It is your ideas I dissent from, but it is your welfare

I am interested in.

Contrast that with the derision coming from your side...

Jamie,

Did you read the link to the article he posted by Victor Hanson? Do you find anything there at remotely resembles reality from your point of view?

Deej, I'll have time to follow Don's links tomorrow. Be glad to discuss it. Right now I'm prepping for a concert shoot with a funky horn band (wool!).

Happy New Year! Stay safe and drive sober...

PS. Did you get any of this snow over there? We dodged a bullet with this last storm, only 10 inches. After several feet from last week's blizzard.

Don, do you have two tongues or are you just talking with two?;-)

Hmmm... Victor Hanson, an American professor that have his own American, "private meanings" and living well on having "official private meanings" for Americans. hmmm...

Hmmm.... Bruce Bawer, a writer that moved from New York to Amsterdam in 1998, where he felt that he could live better as a gay man in a more liberal society. Writing for the most for the American people about us Europeans. Hmmm...

Hmmm... Christopher Hitchens, an English journalist that's now living in Washington D.C.. A man that was ultrared 'till the years of '90, when the Soviet Union system collapsed. Maybe he have a little chameleon inside his body? ...hmmm...

And you mean these people are serving the truth about the whole world outside America? Hmmm... interesting...

But now it's time for the coming year. Get a great NewYear night Don and come well into the coming Year.

Hi Erling.....just a thought. Perhaps these writers have a more realistic and objective perspective on certain things than Europeans do who cannot detach from the reality that they are immersed in on a daily basis and which they have so heavily invested themselves. Any society (includin ours, of course) can wear blinders and I try to listen to others thoughts and opinions, often find validity and always find food for thought in things that you say and even the insanity of Bunelrants. I hope that the scenario that Hanson describes is less of a reality than it would appear, but I personally think, from what I have seen in the American and international press and from what I know of history, that there is a "lot" of truth to it. Anyway, I respect you and though we disagree sometimes, I hope you have a happy new year and that you make a lot of good music in 2007.

That's what I expected, but I thought I should make the attempt anyway. You cannot engage the ideas so you try to marginalize the writers.

Like I said earlier. Pathetic

Don, I will read more on this stuff tomorrow with NewYear eyes and as good as my english permits. But different cultural eyes will allways see the world in different perspectives - as there is great differences in the old and new Testament in the way to live, hate and love. Nothing pathetic at all with that, just that I'm sceptical when someone means they have monopole on the truth with their talking and writing.

Hi Doug... I don't saying anything about what's true or not, just that I'm really sceptical when the writings are being the same as having monopole on the truth in clean black and white, without any other colors at all. There are problems in Europe too but it seems that a good dialoge between the tops of different cultures are making good results, as here in Norway. The Gouvernement, Church and Muslims have had plenty of meetings here and have done and is doing something with the problems. But we're just a little land and small enough to "know the new neighbours" and small enough to learn something with and about them.

Get a Great New Year too, with all you're doing.

To say there is no monopoly on the truth is not the same as saying there is no truth.

If these people and many others are right, Europe is on the verge of the next kristallnacht, and has no ability to save itself.

This is what drives my sharing of these things. Not to argue, nor to meet interesting people pretending to be trolls... (grin)

When I went through the holocaust museum here, the last portion of the tour is to place all of us in a reproduction gas chamber. I was quite offended at the melodrama of this "stunt" as I felt it was, but once the hissing and special FX were over, I was really, really angry, because the chamber made us into things to be killed, not people, and no one had prevented it from happening in the real world.

A little old man with a concentration camp tattoo on his arm came up and asked if we believed this could happen again in Europe.

Most of the people raised their hands.

Then he asked if we thought it could happen here in America. Most of the same hands went up. Mine and one other man's did not. He called out to us and asked "why not?"

And I said "because I will rise up and take the life of anyone who tries to do such a thing in our country". I saw the other man shake his head in agreement.

Well, honestly I expected a lecture in peace and how violence just makes more violence.

Then the man with the concentration camp tattoo pointed to me,
and in a loud voice said:

"If it does not happen in America, HERE is the reason why", there is no other".

And so, here I am doing my best. At minimum, those who disagree can do so in a civil manner, but no, derision is always the weapon of choice when finds oneself without ammo in the fight of our lives...

just a thought....

Deej, I read Don's links end to end. Briefly: The second one (Bruce) was the only one to identify fundamentalism as a basic problem, something I think is insightful. However he criticizes Europeans for criticizing problems in the USA, problems which to a degree we actually have. When I see that kind of implied generalization it calls into question his criticisms of Europeans as also being inaccurately exaggerated.

Hitchens likewise exaggerates his characterizations of those who may disagree with his viewpoint, reveling in creating and grandly knocking over straw men. There is an epidemic of this style of "argument" these days. As can be said about many an armchair general, that he will never "assume the mantle of generalship" (as he puts it) is probably no great loss to our military.

In Hanson's article he appears to take whatever facts are at hand and bend them to attack the things he didn't like anyway, for example socialism. If there were no Islam, I get the strong impression he'd use something else to argue against what he doesn't like.

I don't argue with the facts, when they are actual facts. But when leaps to conclusions are preordained rather than actually deduced, they must be taken with a grain of salt.

I also see that he exaggerates, generalizes, scapegoats and thoroughly enjoys tipping his pet straw men. Apparently he means this to be impressive but I think it seriously detracts from his message.

The funk shoot last night was a blast.

Cheers,

OK, I read this Brussels sprouts thing and felt inspired to comment/question.

First, secularism is not hedonism. Secondly, a secular society is not necessarily devoid of spirituality, in fact, by decreeing a separation of church and state, wasn't our own constitution designing a secular state? Third, many non-Christians (such as myself) are rife with spirituality and Christian values, while many who call themselves Christians seem to value only wealth and power. Fourthly (sounded better than "fourth") Christians are not the only people who reject and oppose radical Islam. Onward Christian soldiers, by all means, but don't forget the rest of us who are not going to be told what to believe by fundamentalists of any species. Lastly, I don't see how encouraging more fear of Islam is going to do anything but create more hatred, violence, and radicalization.

What did any of this have to do with Saddam, anyway? He was a secularist.

And why is it OK to talk politics again? Last time I made a political comment SOMEBODY scolded me . . .

The point was not about religion, it was about whether a culture to whom personal pleasure and comfort is paramount, can defend itself from fascism. The source from which one draws the will to resist fascism is a separate issue from the fact that Europe may or may not be able to resist it.

>don't forget the rest of us who are Good. Glad to hear it. What's your plan?

>Lastly, I don't see how encouraging more fear of Islam is going to do

Your characterization is off. He is asking for an understanding of the true nature of the threat, not asking for fear in and of itself. How is he wrong?

If he is right, what are the consequences?

>What did any of this have to do with Saddam, anyway? He was a secularist.

Which day of the week?

It had nothing to do with Saddam. It had everything to do with me posting a joke about Saddam and having several people go off because of it.

It went:

Saddam Executed - New York Times goes into mourning!

Now, can you chuckle at that, or do you feel the need to give me a good dressing down for it?

Your answer will reveal your level of tolerance for a variety of views.

How are you BTW?

I have a thing about Death Penalties in general, but it is primarily based on my issues with killing innocent people. That was not an issue with Hussein. His death was surly justified, but just below the surface lies the real reason and innocent alike.

When leaders start wars for any reason less than the actual preservation of their country or to stop a clear danger to the majority of their population, they are doing it without just cause. That kind of war is about the ultimate power of leaders. In our case, I believe we went to war to show our willingness you will be stripped of your country and we will hang you and the rest of General Pervez Musharraf writes in his new book that we did just that to go far past showing your willingness to attack other countries from afar, you must show your willingness to sacrifice the lives of your military to show your true resolve.

Ultimately, wars without just cause are just a different form of human sacrifice. To die for the Emperor. It certainly aint new.

Historically, many leaders have required human sacrifices of their own people: Aztec warriors, Imperial Rome, Hitler's Germany, et al.

On a much larger scale has been the sacrificing of entire armies. Millions have died over the millennia for the uncontrolled hubris of a few.

Once again we have all-powerful leaders in the US willing to trade lives for their personal Cause de Jour. We have not come far in the last few thousand years. This is the exact reason the US Constitution goes to great lengths to insure the limited and controlled power of the President, and one again we have failed as citizens and allowed this to happen.

Bush is our Caligula! - Hail Cesar!

As to the question about the validity of the tapes and if Hussein is actually

Ken Lay is dead.

Gene,

History will probably bear out a few "subtle" differences between Bush and Caligula

GW isn't qualified to depilate Caligula's tenth favorite catamite! Say what you will about Caligula (incest, lechery, murder, madness, just to get started) by he had STYLE! If we're looking for an imperial Roman equivalent we need to go for Theodosius perhaps, or Justinian. Or maybe Constantius, the first emperor who really believed in Christianity.
