In association with the British National Archives, Find My Past.com is posting scans of the original Titanic passenger list. It is free, but you must sign up and you need a browser with DJVU mime plugin. This is only online for a limited time.

<https://www.findmypast.com>

Looking down the scan I posted, you see William Nancarrow who was lost in the sinking. I looked him up and found: <http://www.encyclopediatitanica.org/biography/1064/>

Here is a small piece of page 2. I reduced its size and resolution for faster viewing. The original scans are very high res.

Gene

list.
Quite a few characters on that ship.
Mark Fortune

heavy, motheaten fur garment. His wife tried to talk him out of packing so useless a piece of clothing on a trip to Egypt, but he considered it a talisman

No offense intended, Gene, but I have to say I don't understand the long-lasting morbid fascination with the Titanic. Being a sailor, boat captain, having worked on ships and coming from a shipping family, sinking ships are not romantic to me.

The movie Titanic had zero appeal to me. Why would I want to watch a movie in which I know most of the people would die a freezing death from drowning in the North Atlantic due to the overconfidence of a foolish captain. It strikes against all that a captain's responsibility entails, namely the security of the vessel and crew/passengers. I just can't find the romance in it.

A wonderful bit of history is the story of Leif Ericson's successful adventure sailing across the same N. Atlantic to North America with nothing but the planets and stars as guidance, 500 hundred years before Columbus "discovered" it. Moral of the story: hire a Norwegian crew. <http://www.mnc.net/norway/ericson.htm>

Hollywood does have a history of destroying historic events in its recreations. One notable exception being Caveman (1981). That one was Right-On.

But it is precisely because Hollywood (and historians) screw up history so much that looking at genuine historic documents and relics hold a fascination for me.

Caveman is practically a documentary it's so real! History of the World Part I is perhaps the zenith of the comedocudrama genre.
