I could almost categorically say that there would have been no rhythm/main drum overdubs on any of the beatles tracks early on and even very unlikely later as well.

Could be wrong...would be easy to find out...

Merry Christmas to you too, Martin.
When we're talkin about "overdubs" on Beatles records, I can say, the first single they recorded(11.Sept '62), "Love me do/P.S. I love you", the drummers name was Andy White. Ringo was temporarily demoted to play tambourine on "Love me do" and Maracas on "P.S. I love you". There is also an "original" version (on "Past Masters Volume one") with Ringo on the drums on "Love me do", recorded 4. September 1962. All the others, as I have understand from the book following their whole CD collection "The Beatles Box", have Ringo on drums.

According to Sir George Martin, they doubled the snare drum on a regular basis. He stated that on some songs the snare drum had many multi layers, I think one was Ticket To Ride. If you really think about that song you can hear it.

Hey LaMont! It's just something I came across, I thought I would share it with you guys.

(In my best Russian accent) Don't know where or how they got them. Maybe it was KGB;)

Merry Christmas!

It was either KGB, or it was the surround-sound channel split! (look at the actual name of the link you posted!!!)

Hi Erling,
You are indeed right, but they weren't overdubs but retakes..different animals.
Merry Christmas to all.--

There doesn't seem to be any mention of layering the drums on Ticket to Ride in "The Beatles Recording Sessions".
