WOW, did you find a coupon or something and decide to go nuts? I hope you get through it well my friend. I had a friend (36) pass away this weekend.

Really really horrible. His wife gave birth to their 2nd child saturday and he went home to rest, had a seizure and died. Unbelievable !

Life is precious and fragile so be careful and treasure every moment.

Hey man, when you get done with this come on over and help me shovel snow.

Seriously.....good luck with this. Go get yourself some Ex-Lax and Percodan and chill.for a few days.....and don't die.

Holy smokes... best of luck with that.

Incidentally, how did you manage to get a decent enough diagnostic done to actually know that you need all that? I'm in Canada (so completely different health care system), but I know that in my area, if it doesn't bleed or if you can't see the bone sticking out, good luck getting someone to figure out what's wrong with you.

Did you see a specialist? If so, what sort of specialist?

And (you may have guessed it), I ask because I've been having chronics elbow pain for years now, and it's getting much worse...

If done properly on a regular basis, the repeated kneading of the torsoes of young nubiles is recommended therapy for counteracting the effects of bilateral carpel tunnel syndrome.

Good to see you still have a sense of humor.

I'm amazed I haven't had any RSI problems yet. Considering that the time I don't spend typing on a computer I spend making music you'd think I'd have had them all by now. So far, just lucky I guess.

Take care, and it's coming our way for sunday and monday. by colorado standards it may not be much but we've had over 60" so far along with a couple of 2-3" rain storms.

speaking of the u.p. 68' was a bumper years for snow there. i remember diving off the dorm roofs into the snow...not drifts, just the regular snowfall.
