
Subject: This is about to make me nuts!!!!

Posted by [Deej \[1\]](#) on Mon, 09 Jan 2006 19:29:59 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on this mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really good and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when another equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has to be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and just takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects these players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two as far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain passage. He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the performance. It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in others. I can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This mix isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else is wrong.....am I right?

;o)

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!

Posted by Tony Benson on Mon, 09 Jan 2006 19:43:43 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Deej,

Rule #1: You are always right.

Even when you're wrong! ;>)

The truth is, if you were hired to mix the project with the direction of the producer, then he's got the final say. It's really hard to "detach" your self from these kind's of things, but it has to be done. All you can do is tactfully make observations or suggestions. After that, it's out of your hands. If you are really attached to this project, make your own mix after the producer leaves and have it handy to show the group/producer if they decide changes need to be made.

Tony

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote in message
news:43c2ba35$1@linux...

> I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on this > mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix > making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the > mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really > good
> and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when
> another
> equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has
> to > be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and
> just > takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects these > players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
> as > far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain > passage.
> He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the performance.
> It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in others.
> I
> can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
> mix
> isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
> won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last > long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
> is
> wrong.....am I right?
>
> ;o)
>
>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!

Posted by EK Sound on Mon, 09 Jan 2006 20:07:41 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

My $.02... why bother using good players if you aren't going to let their best shine through? Would he leave an out of tune guitar in the mix?... probably not.

David.

DJ wrote:

> I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on this
> mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix
> making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the > mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really good > and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when another > equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has to > be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and just > takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects these > players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two as > far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain passage.

> He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the performance.
> It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in others. I > can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This mix
> isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
> won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last > long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else is
> wrong.....am I right?
>
> ;o)
>
>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!

Posted by Mark McDermott on Mon, 09 Jan 2006 20:43:48 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Hey Deej,

Sounds like you could use those Karass Institute negotiation tapes...

How about "Even though we need to respect the players the song is more important."
Some of the best players have ended up on the cutting room floor!

Good luck!

Mark

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:

>I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on this
>mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix
>making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the >mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
good
>and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when another >equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has
to >be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and just >takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects these >players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
as

>far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain passage.
>He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the performance.
>It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in others.
I
>can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
mix
>isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
>won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last >long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
is
>wrong.....am I right?
>
>;o)
>
>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!

Posted by Martin Harrington on Mon, 09 Jan 2006 20:54:49 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Deej, He needs to remember, "LESS IS MORE", be ruthless.
Sounds like the stuff is not arranged too well if there are no holes to breath anywhere.
BTW, yes, you're right....

--

Martin Harrington
www.lendaneer-sound.com

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote in message
news:43c2ba35$1@linux...

> I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on this
> mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix
> making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the > mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
> good
> and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when
> another
> equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has
> to > be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and
> just
> takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects these > players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
> as
> far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain
> passage.
> He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the performance.

> It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in others.
> I
> can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
> mix
> isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
> won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last > long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
> is
> wrong.....am I right?
>
> ;o)
>
>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!
Posted by [Deej \[1\]](#) on Mon, 09 Jan 2006 20:57:43 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I see everyone's point here. I'm making an alternative mix (PITA, but nessessary in this case) this project is going to be marketed at his venue on BroadwayNYC and it's going get a lot of exposure elsewhere as well.....plus there's going to be a big CD release party with a lot of critical ears present.....and my name will be all over this as the recording/mix and most likely the mastering engineer as well (I'm really trying to talk him out of that one but his budget is limited at this point)

Thanks for the feedback.

;o)

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote in message
news:43c2ba35$1@linux...

> I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on this
> mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix
> making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the > mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
good
> and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when
another
> equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has
to > be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and
just
> takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects these > players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
as > far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain

passage.

> He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the performance.

> It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in others.

I

> can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This mix

> isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just

> won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last > long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else is

> wrong.....am I right?

>

> ;o)

>

>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!

Posted by [Deej \[1\]](#) on Mon, 09 Jan 2006 22:18:32 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

> I've been right for a long time, it's just other people are wrong so often

> that they can't see it. ;o)

>

I can soooooo relate to this.

;O)

"Kim" <hiddensounds@hotmail.com> wrote in message news:43c2ddab$1@linux...

>

> "DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:

> >My problem is, and this is why I could never last

> >long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else

> is

> >wrong.....am I right?

>

> I did post, did I not, the diagram of the live setup I have created in order > that I can create a full band sound live on stage all by myself without anybody > else playing with me and hence playing the wrong thing. ;o)

>

> I've been right for a long time, it's just other people are wrong so often

> that they can't see it. ;o)

>

> Cheers,

> Kim.

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!
Posted by DC on Mon, 09 Jan 2006 22:20:21 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Sooo, how many producers does it take to change a light bulb?

I dunno... waddya YOU think?

heh heh

Listen, everyone thinks they know how something should be mixed, just like everyone knows how something should be arranged and could have done it better if you had just let them.

But you have to trust your instincts. We have all left "little" clams in, and lived to regret it haven't we? Some clams work, and some don't. You clearly can tell that these won't.

I would do a mix with Mr. Producer absent and then show it to him.

This is how Wally Traugott mastered "Dark Side of the Moon". He got the tape via courier, but the producer had not arrived yet from England (I think the producer was Alan Parsons, but don't quote me) so Wally just did it the way he wanted to with no one else in the room.

Well, they loved it so much they wouldn't let him change a thing and this is the record we all know and love.

The question is whether your producer is man enough to admit it if you nail it. It takes a big heart and small ego to admit that it came out perfectly without his involvement, but if he loves the music more than his ego, he can do so.

Whose vision is the right one is a huge subject that deserves a book written on it. Many different visions can produce good results, but only one is likely to lift the track to real success. Just like a good audio engineer knows what a lot of people will call "good sound" a good producer will understand which parts elevate the song and which parts make it boring. For instance, the famous Clapton "Crossroads" solo was never played as such by Eric. It was edited (by Tom Dowd) together from a much longer jam. To this day Eric has to hear "hey man! that was the definitive guitar solo of your career!! Eric hates to hear that, as you can imagine. Sure worked though, didn't it?

Tom Dowd had great ears and vision to match.

The worst situation of all is when someone simply does not have what it takes to make these decisions, but needs to anyway for self-validation or other such bullsh*t.

Also, wometimes we resort to standard arrangements,sounds and techniques like it has always been done before, when what the tune needed was doing it "wrong" in a creative way. John Lennon walks in the control room and plugs his guitar into the board. Overdrives the desk like crazy. The engineers are going oh NO!! You can't do that!! But he insisted, and so we have "Revolution".

Vision. There is no substitute. If you know how something should be, you should find a way to make it that way if you can.

Of course, don't punch out the producer... Well if you do, be sure to post pictures of it...

heh

DC

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:

>I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on this
>mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix
>making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the >mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
good
>and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when another >equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has
to >be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and just >takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects these >players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
as >far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain passage.
>He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the performance.
>It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in others.
I
>can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
mix
>isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
>won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last >long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
is
>wrong.....am I right?
>

>;o)
>
>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!
Posted by Kim on Mon, 09 Jan 2006 23:03:23 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:
>My problem is, and this is why I could never last
>long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
is
>wrong.....am I right?

I did post, did I not, the diagram of the live setup I have created in order that I can create a full band sound live on stage all by myself without anybody
else playing with me and hence playing the wrong thing. ;o)

I've been right for a long time, it's just other people are wrong so often
that they can't see it. ;o)

Cheers,
Kim.

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!
Posted by Kim on Mon, 09 Jan 2006 23:04:51 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

"Tony Benson" <tony@standinghampton.com> wrote:
>make your own mix after >the producer leaves and have it handy

That's the idea! :o)

Subject: Re: Am I nuts!!!! - a suggestion
Posted by Don Nafe on Mon, 09 Jan 2006 23:45:48 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Throw the puppy up in mono and see where everything sits...then EQ / process to get everything in it's place then put it back in stereo and see what happens...may help.

May not

Don

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote in message
news:43c2ba35$1@linux...

> I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on this
> mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix
> making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the > mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
> good
> and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when
> another
> equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has
> to > be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and
> just
> takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects these > players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
> as
> far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain
> passage.
> He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the performance.
> It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in others.
> I
> can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
> mix
> isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
> won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last > long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
> is
> wrong.....am I right?
>
> ;o)
>
>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!

Posted by excelav on Tue, 10 Jan 2006 03:35:33 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

A lot could be said here.

I think you should talk him in to recutting the necessary parts, kind of a, A mix/cut, B mix/cut. Tell him this wouldn't be redoing everything, this would be giving him more options to choose from. Offer to do this for free, tell him you just want the project to be all that it can be. Tell him you know your stuff, and ask him to trust you. Tell him you'd feel much better about the project this way. This would give him more choices, plus he would have the final say anyways. Tell him that this would be a chance for you to really show him what you can do (What you can really do for him!). If he doesn't like it he won't have to use it, but you think more than likely he would use at least some of the recuts.

If he goes for it, do your own great mix and present it to him. Then tell him that if he uses it you wouldn't want any extra credits. Hopefully he will hear/see the light.

I know you love your work, so doing extra work for free won't kill you, putting out a piece of crap with your name on it would.

Remember, it never goes quite the way you would like it to in life.

Good luck!

James

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:

>I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on this
>mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix
>making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the >mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
good
>and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when another >equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has
to >be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and just >takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects these >players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
as >far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain passage.
>He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the performance.
>It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in others.
I
>can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
mix
>isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
>won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last >long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
is
>wrong.....am I right?
>
>;o)
>

>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!
Posted by [Deej \[1\]](#) on Tue, 10 Jan 2006 05:24:02 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

He just left. I put the mix up that I did this afternoon. It differs quite a bit from the one we did last night. I carved out the sloppy clams and retuned the notes that were butting heads that I thought would work for what we were trying to achieve. I also did some comping of this and that and dropped it on the4 timeline where needed. I took him on a tour of both mixes and showed him exactly what I did and why.

He loved it. We just finished remixing the song with a few more decisions he made based on my basic groundwork. I think they were good decisions. His last words before leaving tonight were" OK man, you just go ahead and get it done and call me when you feel like we're close. I trust your judgment."

Life is good.

:o)

"James McCloskey" <excelsm@hotmail.com> wrote in message
news:43c31d75$1@linux...

>

> A lot could be said here.

>

> I think you should talk him in to recutting the necessary parts, kind of > a, A mix/cut, B mix/cut. Tell him this wouldn't be redoing everything, this > would be giving him more options to choose from. Offer to do this for

free,

> tell him you just want the project to be all that it can be. Tell him
you > know your stuff, and ask him to trust you. Tell him you'd feel much better

> about the project this way. This would give him more choices, plus he would > have the final say anyways. Tell him that this would be a chance for you > to really show him what you can do (What you can really do for him!). If > he doesn't like it he won't have to use it, but you think more than likely

> he would use at least some of the recuts.

>

> If he goes for it, do your own great mix and present it to him. Then tell > him that if he uses it you wouldn't want any extra credits. Hopefully he > will hear/see the light.

>
> I know you love your work, so doing extra work for free won't kill you, putting
> out a piece of crap with your name on it would.
>
> Remember, it never goes quite the way you would like it to in life.
>
> Good luck!
>
> James
>
>
>
> "DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:
> >I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on
this
> >mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix
> >making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the > >mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
> good
> >and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when
another
> >equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has
> to > >be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and
just > >takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects
these > >players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
> as > >far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain
passage.
> >He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the performance.
> >It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in others.
> I
> >can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
> mix
> >isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
> >won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last > >long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
> is
> >wrong.....am I right?
> >
> >;o)
> >
> >

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!
Posted by DC on Tue, 10 Jan 2006 06:34:59 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Yes! Good result. Sounds like a good guy.

DC

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:

>He just left. I put the mix up that I did this afternoon. It differs quite a >bit from the one we did last night. I carved out the sloppy clams and >retuned the notes that were butting heads that I thought would work for what >we were trying to achieve. I also did some comping of this and that and >dropped it on the 4 timeline where needed. I took him on a tour of both mixes >and showed him exactly what I did and why.
>
>He loved it. We just finished remixing the song with a few more decisions
he >made based on my basic groundwork. I think they were good decisions. His >last words before leaving tonight were "OK man, you just go ahead and get
it >done and call me when you feel like we're close. I trust your judgment."
>
>Life is good.
>
>:o)
>
>
>"James McCloskey" <excelsm@hotmail.com> wrote in message
>news:43c31d75$1@linux...
>>
>> A lot could be said here.
>>
>> I think you should talk him in to recutting the necessary parts, kind
of
>> a, A mix/cut, B mix/cut. Tell him this wouldn't be redoing everything, >this >> would be giving him more options to choose from. Offer to do this for
>free,
>> tell him you just want the project to be all that it can be. Tell him
>you >> know your stuff, and ask him to trust you. Tell him you'd feel much >better
>> about the project this way. This would give him more choices, plus he
>would >> have the final say anyways. Tell him that this would be a chance for

you
>> to really show him what you can do (What you can really do for him!).
If
>> he doesn't like it he won't have to use it, but you think more than likely
>> he would use at least some of the recuts.
>>
>> If he goes for it, do your own great mix and present it to him. Then tell >> him that if he uses it you wouldn't want any extra credits. Hopefully
he
>> will hear/see the light.
>>
>> I know you love your work, so doing extra work for free won't kill you,
>putting
>> out a piece of crap with your name on it would.
>>
>> Remember, it never goes quite the way you would like it to in life.
>>
>> Good luck!
>>
>> James
>>
>>
>>
>> "DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:
>> >I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on
>this
>> >mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the
mix
>> >making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in
the
>> >mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
>> good
>> >and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when
>another
>> >equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has
>> to >> >be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and
>just >> >takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects
>these >> >players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
>> as >> >far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain
>passage.
>> >He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the

>performance.
>> >It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in
>others.
>> I
>> >can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
>> mix
>> >isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
>> >won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last >> >long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
>> is
>> >wrong.....am I right?
>> >
>> >;o)
>> >
>> >
>
>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!
Posted by Tony Benson on Tue, 10 Jan 2006 06:41:56 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Yes!

Tony

On 1/9/06 11:24 PM, in article 43c34572@linux, "DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:

> He just left. I put the mix up that I did this afternoon. It differs quite a > bit from the one we did last night. I carved out the sloppy clams and > retuned the notes that were butting heads that I thought would work for what > we were trying to achieve. I also did some comping of this and that and > dropped it on the4 timeline where needed. I took him on a tour of both mixes > and showed him exactly what I did and why.
>
> He loved it. We just finished remixing the song with a few more decisions he > made based on my basic groundwork. I think they were good decisions. His > last words before leaving tonight were" OK man, you just go ahead and get it > done and call me when you feel like we're close. I trust your judgment."
>
> Life is good.
>
> :o)
>

>
> "James McCloskey" <excelsm@hotmail.com> wrote in message
> news:43c31d75$1@linux...
>>
>> A lot could be said here.
>>
>> I think you should talk him in to recutting the necessary parts, kind of >> a, A mix/cut, B mix/cut. Tell him this wouldn't be redoing everything, > this >> would be giving him more options to choose from. Offer to do this for
> free,
>> tell him you just want the project to be all that it can be. Tell him
> you >> know your stuff, and ask him to trust you. Tell him you'd feel much > better
>> about the project this way. This would give him more choices, plus he > would >> have the final say anyways. Tell him that this would be a chance for you >> to really show him what you can do (What you can really do for him!). If >> he doesn't like it he won't have to use it, but you think more than likely
>> he would use at least some of the recuts.
>>
>> If he goes for it, do your own great mix and present it to him. Then tell >> him that if he uses it you wouldn't want any extra credits. Hopefully he >> will hear/see the light.
>>
>> I know you love your work, so doing extra work for free won't kill you,
> putting
>> out a piece of crap with your name on it would.
>>
>> Remember, it never goes quite the way you would like it to in life.
>>
>> Good luck!
>>
>> James
>>
>>
>>
>> "DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:
>>> I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on
> this
>>> mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix
>>> making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the >>> mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
>> good
>>> and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when
> another
>>> equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has

>> to >>> be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and
> just
>>> takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects
> these >>> players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
>> as
>>> far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain
> passage.
>>> He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the
> performance.
>>> It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in
> others.
>> I
>>> can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
>> mix
>>> isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
>>> won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last >>> long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
>> is
>>> wrong.....am I right?
>>>
>>> ;o)
>>>
>>>
>
>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!
Posted by Kim on Tue, 10 Jan 2006 08:22:01 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

WOOHOO!!!
[chanted like ricky lake]
Go D.J... Go D.J... Go D.J... Go D.J...

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:
>He just left. I put the mix up that I did this afternoon. It differs quite
>a
>bit from the one we did last night. I carved out the sloppy clams and >retuned the notes that were butting heads that I thought would work for
>what
>we were trying to achieve. I also did some comping of this and that and >dropped it on the 4 timeline where needed. I took him on a tour of both mixes >and showed him exactly what I did and why.
>
>He loved it. We just finished remixing the song with a few more decisions

he >made based on my basic groundwork. I think they were good decisions. His >last words before leaving tonight were" OK man, you just go ahead and get
it
>done and call me when you feel like we're close. I trust your judgment."
>
>Life is good.
>
>:
>
>
>"James McCloskey" <excelsm@hotmail.com> wrote in message
>news:43c31d75$1@linux...
>>
>> A lot could be said here.
>>
>> I think you should talk him in to recutting the necessary parts, kind
of
>> a, A mix/cut, B mix/cut. Tell him this wouldn't be redoing everything, >this >> would be giving him more options to choose from. Offer to do this for
>free,
>> tell him you just want the project to be all that it can be. Tell him
>you >> know your stuff, and ask him to trust you. Tell him you'd feel much >better
>> about the project this way. This would give him more choices, plus he >would >> have the final say anyways. Tell him that this would be a chance for
you
>> to really show him what you can do (What you can really do for him!).
If
>> he doesn't like it he won't have to use it, but you think more than likely
>> he would use at least some of the recuts.
>>
>> If he goes for it, do your own great mix and present it to him. Then tell >> him that if he uses it you wouldn't want any extra credits. Hopefully
he
>> will hear/see the light.
>>
>> I know you love your work, so doing extra work for free won't kill you,
>putting
>> out a piece of crap with your name on it would.
>>
>> Remember, it never goes quite the way you would like it to in life.
>>
>> Good luck!

>>
>> James
>>
>>
>>
>> "DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:
>> >I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on
>this
>> >mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the
mix
>> >making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in
the
>> >mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
>> good
>> >and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when
>another
>> >equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision
has
>> to >> >be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and
>just >> >takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects
>these >> >players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
>> as >> >far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain
>passage.
>> >He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the
>performance.
>> >It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in
>others.
>> I
>> >can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
>> mix
>> >isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
>> >won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last >> >long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
>> is
>> >wrong.....am I right?
>> >
>> >;o)
>> >
>> >
>
>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!
Posted by rick on Tue, 10 Jan 2006 11:04:19 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

these boots were made for talkin'

On Mon, 9 Jan 2006 22:24:02 -0700, "DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:

>He just left. I put the mix up that I did this afternoon. It differs quite a >bit from the one we did last night. I carved out the sloppy clams and >retuned the notes that were butting heads that I thought would work for what >we were trying to achieve. I also did some comping of this and that and >dropped it on the 4 timeline where needed. I took him on a tour of both mixes >and showed him exactly what I did and why.

>

>He loved it. We just finished remixing the song with a few more decisions he >made based on my basic groundwork. I think they were good decisions. His >last words before leaving tonight were "OK man, you just go ahead and get it >done and call me when you feel like we're close. I trust your judgment."

>

>Life is good.

>

>:o)

>

>

>"James McCloskey" <excelsm@hotmail.com> wrote in message
>news:43c31d75$1@linux...

>>

>> A lot could be said here.

>>

>> I think you should talk him in to recutting the necessary parts, kind of >> a, A mix/cut, B mix/cut. Tell him this wouldn't be redoing everything, >this >> would be giving him more options to choose from. Offer to do this for

>free,

>> tell him you just want the project to be all that it can be. Tell him
>you

>> know your stuff, and ask him to trust you. Tell him you'd feel much >better

>> about the project this way. This would give him more choices, plus he >would >> have the final say anyways. Tell him that this would be a chance for you >> to really show him what you can do (What you can really do for him!). If >> he doesn't like it he won't have to use it, but you think more than likely

>> he would use at least some of the recuts.

>>

>> If he goes for it, do your own great mix and present it to him. Then tell >> him that if he uses it you wouldn't want any extra credits. Hopefully he >> will hear/see the light.

>>
>> I know you love your work, so doing extra work for free won't kill you,
>putting
>> out a piece of crap with your name on it would.
>>
>> Remember, it never goes quite the way you would like it to in life.
>>
>> Good luck!
>>
>> James
>>
>>
>>
>> "DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:
>> >I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on
>this
>> >mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the mix
>> >making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in the >> >mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
>> good
>> >and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when
>another
>> >equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision has
>> to >> >be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and
>just >> >takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects
>these >> >players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
>> as >> >far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain
>passage.
>> >He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the
>performance.
>> >It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in
>others.
>> I
>> >can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
>> mix
>> >isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
>> >won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last >> >long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
>> is
>> >wrong.....am I right?
>> >
>> >;o)
>> >

>> >
>

Subject: Re: This is about to make me nuts!!!!
Posted by Mark McDermott on Tue, 10 Jan 2006 18:42:08 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Deej,

We always knew you were a "take charge" kind-a guy!

Now, breath deep. O-H-M O-H-M O-H-M O-H-M

(Repeat until necessary or until next paying client shows up!)

Mark

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:

>He just left. I put the mix up that I did this afternoon. It differs quite
a

>bit from the one we did last night. I carved out the sloppy clams and >retuned the notes that were butting heads that I thought would work for
what

>we were trying to achieve. I also did some comping of this and that and >dropped it on the4 timeline where needed. I took him on a tour of both mixes >and showed him exactly what I did and why.

>

>He loved it. We just finished remixing the song with a few more decisions
he

>made based on my basic groundwork. I think they were good decisions. His >last words before leaving tonight were " OK man, you just go ahead and get
it

>done and call me when you feel like we're close. I trust your judgment."

>

>Life is good.

>

>:o)

>

>

>"James McCloskey" <excelsm@hotmail.com> wrote in message
>news:43c31d75$1@linux...

>>

>> A lot could be said here.

>>

>> I think you should talk him in to recutting the necessary parts, kind
of

>> a, A mix/cut, B mix/cut. Tell him this wouldn't be redoing everything,

>this >> would be giving him more options to choose from. Offer to do this for
>free,
>> tell him you just want the project to be all that it can be. Tell him
>you >> know your stuff, and ask him to trust you. Tell him you'd feel much >better
>> about the project this way. This would give him more choices, plus he >would >> have the final say anyways. Tell him that this would be a chance for
you
>> to really show him what you can do (What you can really do for him!).
If
>> he doesn't like it he won't have to use it, but you think more than likely
>> he would use at least some of the recuts.
>>
>> If he goes for it, do your own great mix and present it to him. Then tell >> him that if he uses it you wouldn't want any extra credits. Hopefully
he
>> will hear/see the light.
>>
>> I know you love your work, so doing extra work for free won't kill you,
>putting
>> out a piece of crap with your name on it would.
>>
>> Remember, it never goes quite the way you would like it to in life.
>>
>> Good luck!
>>
>> James
>>
>>
>>
>> "DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:
>> >I'm doing a mix here. We've got a lot of acoustic instruments goin on
>this
>> >mix and the client/producer/songwriter/arranger is sitting in on the
mix
>> >making decisions as to which instruments he wants up in the holes in
the
>> >mix, since we have many options. The players on this project are really
>> good
>> >and it's sorta' agonizing for him to sacrifice hearing one part when
>another
>> >equally good riff is being played on the same timeline and a decision
has
>> to >> >be made as to one or the other. Well, this is all part of the game and

>just
>> >takes time. What's making me nuts is that the client really respects
>these >> >players. These guys, as good as they are, occasionally had a clam or two
>> as >> >far as the number of notes that may have been played over a certain
>passage.
>> >He doesn't want to change this stuff out of respect for the
>performance.
>> >It just doesn't work in some cases and sounds like a trainwreck in
>others.
>> I
>> >can easily fix it in the editor, but he's uncomfortable with this. This
>> mix
>> >isn't going to work with certain of these unedited passages.....it just
>> >won't.....trust me. My problem is, and this is why I could never last >> >long in a band, is that I know what needs to be done and everyone else
>> is
>> >wrong.....am I right?
>> >
>> >;o)
>> >
>> >
>
>
