Dear dismayed conservatives:

I hereby make these promises to you.

We will protect your lives and livelihoods.

We will listen to and respect your beliefs.

We will never try to force you to change your religion, sexual orientation, or first language.

We will do our best to reduce the number of abortions in our country.

We will have no tolerance for corruption and cronyism, even in our own party.

ESPECIALLY in our own party.

We will never tell you that you are unpatriotic.

We will never tell you that your opinion doesn't count.

We will never waste your lives for power.

We will hold our leaders to a high ethical standard and when they succumb to lust for power, WE WILL HOLD THEM ACCOUNTABLE.

If we forget this, please, please, please, remind us.

We need you to do this. You are America as much as we are.
Let's go.

I'm not a Republican, but I'll be ecstatic if that what you say holds true Justin. You'll have to forgive me if don't have much hope anything will change though. Check back with me in 2008 and we'll see how them Dems did.

(ecstatic, boy dat's a pritty big word. I don't know whether I'm ecstatic, or ludicrous!) ;>) yeah exactly. I figured it was a nice uplifting message anyway, but yeah we know the reality. Both parties suck.

I dont even know what party I am anymore. I mostly vote Green because its not the status quo, not that they have a great plan or organization.

I'm sure we'll need to kick the dems out of congress in 12 years too, but maybe for now theres a little light at the end of the tunnel.

1. It was sort of interesting to see that the Democratic party won by running many conservative candidates. It will be even more interesting to see if they were really conservatives or if they will now show their true colors and march in lockstep with the left wing power structure.
2. The democratic leadership will need to actually be expected to show some leadership instead of just carping about how they don't like what the republicans are doing. They will be held accountable finally, just as the republicans have been.
3. Since the republicans have rebuilt the economy that Clinton destroyed, and it usually takes the democrats at least 4 years to wreck a good economy, the border control issue is going to be their biggest domestic challenge. They are going to have to carry the ball on this and if it is not effective, the responsibility will fall in their lap.

Having this party in charge of the House intelligence committee (again) is a scary thought. Alcee Hastings may be heading the House Intelligence Committee. He was once a Fed. judge in Florida who was impeached by a then Democratic (!) Congress in the 80's for leaking secrets about a Fed. trial involving a big-time drug ring and accepting a $150,000 bribe. He is one of a very few federal judges ever to be removed from office. Is Pelosi going to drain the swamp only to repopulate it with convicted vermin?

I think the good thing about this is that they are now going to be in a "put up or shut up" situation and there is at least the possibility that they will be called on their whining by the independent voters who put them over the top.

If they are truly as clueless as they appear to be and if they do things like appoint Hastings, start wrecking the economy (a la Rangel), try for a presidential impeachment and cut funding for Iraq, it will be quickly obvious that they are the same old tired socialist flotsam that we swept out in the 90's and they will be tossed out on their respective arses in two years rather than 4 years (as would happen if they won the presidency in 2008). This may be the best of two evils as far as conservatives are concerned.

I'll hold my breath for a little while and give them the benefit of the doubt. They haven't had one constructive (realistic) idea as of yet but they keep hinting around that they do. It's now time to see if it's all hat, no cowboy and it seems that now, when they are questioned about what they're gonna do, they can't scoot backwards on their asses fast enough now that they will be expected to come up with the plan that they never had.

So why didn't they say they would get along before the 7th? Why haven't they done this for the last 40+ years? Why have they been so divisive?

When Abramoff got busted they all got in line and gave money back, but yet they pointed at the Republicans and screamed "Scandal". So typical! "Look at them, they're dirtier than us". When it comes to our interest, both parties are the same. The truth is they are both a bunch of dirty greasy slimy rats.

They are eating our lunch, they sell us out by the second.

They weaken us by them both pointing at each other and saying "look at how dirty those bastards are" They keep us divided on the issues, and they stay in power! They get fat and rich, while the middle class dies. That's how the two party system works, they keep us divided and weak, they stay in power, and we lose!

People we need more than a two party system. We need to take back our government.

We need a government for the people and by the people. We do need change, but the answer is not the Democrats! We need to get rid of all the fat bloated lying lawyer career politicians! WE need to get rid of ALL the lobby groups.

WE need a new justice system. We need a new tax system, We need a complete over haul of the government, it is way too corrupt! Easy to do? NO! Necessary to do yes! Will it happen? Only if you and I decide to come together, be honest, and do it together. We'd have to put our issues aside for ever.

That means we have to stop looking back and playing the blame game! The entitlement mentality is going to break and kill this country.

The powers that be, (Politicians, world banks, etc.) are shifting the wealth of The United States (WE the People) to third world countries. They are selling America off wholesale, right under our noses. They want to rule the world economically. THE NEW WORLD ORDER! WE better wake up fast.

The other issue facing the US is China. If we are not careful we will have Chinese boots on American soil in the next 30 years. Make no mistake, they are planning on it, just do some research on it. They plan to take over the world.

The first step is to see the truth. The second is to stop listening to the politicians and the media. The third is to be honest and come together.

The forth is to take massive action. That means you!

We need change. I hope the Democrats make the right changes, and get the country going in the right direction. Unfortunately I believe they will try to destroy and damage the Republican party, with more scandals and criminal prosecutions so they can stay in power for years and years to come. This will not help the country. They need to focus on getting us back on track, but they are already talking war with the republicans. That's just dirty politics as usual, not what we need. Lip service is nice, I want to see action. Also prepare for tax increases, they need to buy votes for 2008 with your money.

I hope I'm wrong. I hope this is a new start. We'll see.

political post should be in the general news group section!!!

Thats not really fair or insightful Deej. You need to factor in the fact that Clinton balanced the budget and Bush spends your great grandchildrens money every day.

Somethin to think about.

The democrats have taken control of the house (at least right now) with no agenda whatsoever.

They actually don't have a mandate from the voters to do ANYTHING. They managed to manipulate the voters with a constant drumbeat of hatred against Bush and turned that into a win. And now they think don't have to do ANYTHING. They didn't promise to do anything, they offered no solutions, no plans, nothing.. just used hatred for bush to get back into power.

I find that more than a little scary..but I sure applaud the democrats for pulling it off.

Reality is that these conservative Democrats owe the liberal leadership already. Pelosi orchestrated this and these freshman congressfolk are in the bag....mere window dressing to put a moderate face on. Unless they tow the liberal line, they will get nowhere as career politicians and will not be supported next election by the Dem power structure so the real winners were the manipulative leftist power structure. It's diabolically clever. They make guys like Carl Rove seem like rank amateurs when they put their minds to it.

DJ, I thought you were a Democrat??

Here in the midwest, the economy is not as good as we bring told. I's very bad. Wages have not increase in years. Massive lay-offs are everywhere here in the rust belt. That's Why we voted he way we did. Tax breaks for the rich, no break for the workign class??? What gives..??

And, the current administration has not had a plan for Iraq as well. I for one and glad that there is a change called BALANCE.. Now, they can repeal that "eavesdropping act, kill the Patriot act..Get back to a right to decent, without being called an American..

Oh no you don't my friend.. Roves use of Gay marriages in the 2004 election to drum up the evangelicals was geinus..

P.S.

The dem do have an agenda and that is to make Bush's las 2 years a Lame-Duck living hell AND stop the use of FEAR (Foxnews) to control the electorate.. More power to them !!

Well, in all fairness to the Dems, they DO have a mandate... a mandate for "change", even if that change isn't very well-defined at all. So we sell all our stocks & mutual funds, stuff our money in a mattress somewhere & watch the economy plunge into the shitter, and wait a few years 'til the Republicans get back in power on the next cycle of "change", and then maybe we can start all over again.

I think that's a good assessment Thad - I agree with you. We are much more directly impacted and influenced by the market/economy than political leadership. After all, money pays the bills, not political platforms (in overly simplistic terms at least).

I don't think presidents can wreck economies. A Fed chairman can, but I don't think a president can. And say what you will about bubba, but at the end of his reign of terror we had a budget surplus and a much smaller trade deficit.

Now then, in the eighties the Japanese equivalent of the fed was terrified of unemployment so it made credit absurdly easy to get. Eventually, if enough cheap money is sloshing around it will smash up against something that is truly finite like, oh, say, land. So small chunks of downtown Tokyo were worth more than Delaware. Then, for various reasons interest rates had to go up and there was a massive bloodletting in the real estate markets. Sound familiar? Unky Greenspan did it, under the watch of both parties.

Are you really happy that our economy is artificially propped up with trillions
of dollars borrowed from countries like China?

Absolutely not....and who praytell, gave China the jumpstart that vaulted them into the position they are in nowadays?

>It's bad enough that we have placed ourselves in the position that we need >a constant flow of mideast oil to keep our economy going.<

I agree. A president with some foresight would have recognized this back when we had the time to do something about it, especially upon having had ward publicly declared on this country by Al Qaeda. So what are we going to do? Are the Democrats going to solve this? In order to do so, we need to become energy independent as in..yesterday. Now how to go about that when all domestic energy options other than drilling for oil in old, depleted oil and gas reservoirs here are off the table whereas solutions that are proven could bring this about within the next 5 years are off the table?

I'm all for clean energy. enough clean energy to sustain t'lour economy is 15 years away, at least. We don't have 15 years...especially with a party in power that is willing to negotiate with terrorists, which to them is a sign of weakness. They will be encouraged by this.

This is true. Bush is responsible for many things. What you are missing is, that there are two parties running our government, not just Bush! The two parties are both bad! We have things like this because of both parties. You are falling right in to what they want, what they create and perpetuate, the finger pointing. They are both corrupt, they both made back room dirty deals and sold US out! Both Parties are responsible for where are country is. The day the people of this country stop the blame game and realize the truth and fire all of these career politician rat bastards, the better off this country will be.

The 527s and the lobby groups have to go first. The electoral college is second. We need to count the exact vote of the people some how, and I don't care if it takes a month.

The system is broken, and patching it with the same kind of people (Democrats) is not going to fix it. We need real change, and that can only be done by WE THE PEOPLE!!!

Really? That sounds like no benefit of the doubt whatsoever.

What I'm hearing from you, DeeJ, seems like an echo of the constant drumbeat of Democrat hating and bashing put forth by special interest influenced and poorly researched (but cheap to produce) talk radio and TV blather that are to journalism as shit is to caviar.

Now, some of your repeated Democrat bashing may well be deserved, but it sounds like rehashed propaganda because there is almost nothing positive in what you say about the Democrats, almost nothing negative about the Republicans, and especially because the same talking points keep coming up.

-Hiding behind "Bush Bashing" and "Bush Hating" Bush-as-victim accusations as if there are no reasonable areas to disagree with the policies and performance of the current government, (which by the way includes three branches, not just the executive). This is a very slanted interpretation of events and of the actions of the electorate in this election.

-Meanwhile bashing Clinton, blaming Clinton and Clinton hate in ironic amounts. While ignoring all Republican components to government during his 8 years in office, and ignoring all that came before and since. This is also a very slanted interpretation of current events.

-Projecting every mistake and misstep of the Republicans onto the Democrats. As if the Republicans can do no wrong and Democrats can do no right.

-For that matter, making this about the political parties instead of the individuals involved.

Personally, I think there are competent/trustworthy and incompetent/corrupt people in both parties. And unethical people running the propaganda machines whose talking points you seem to be repeating.

It might help to turn off the TV and radio for a couple of months (at least the one-winged variety), write a long letter to your congressfolk about your concerns, and see if you can truly give the next congress the benefit of the doubt while they get to work. There's a lot that needs to be done.

Cheers,

I've spent the last few years working in one of the most successful money managing organizations in history, so I follow markets (willingly or not) on a daily basis. The petrodollar thing is just nonsense. The rest of what you say, about foreigners holding massive amounts of US debt, is true. I don't necessarily think it's all that much worse to have Japanese banks hold that debt instead of US banks, and those banks are so internationalized it might not make any difference. The real problem, though, is that we have that massive debt in the first place, no matter who holds it. And that debt is just our governmental debt, not the personal debt and interest only loans that have been written. But if tomorrow the Euro is used for some percentage of oil transactions the world won't end, and the US won't be massively changed.

Energy policy needs immediate attention. And some amount of time for better policies to help, as you say.

We also need leadership that won't let the wacky beliefs of a few terrorists directly control their course of action (or inaction).

I have a good mattress, I'll happily store your excess cash and stuff. :^)

Historically, the investment climate has been good and bad under the leadership of both major parties, so I can probably come up with an investment strategy better than a mattress no matter who's in power...

Democrats have been responsible for some questionable spending decisions. However Republicans have done little to provide a better example. Republicans have to take a hard look at their own government spending because they have managed to break all the records. The deficit is more than it has ever been. If taxes go up it will be most likely because of the need to pay the bill due on that.

Taxes are one element of living expenses but not the major piece. For example, I don't know about your neck o' the woods, but here we're paying more for gas the day after the election than we did for the few stable weeks before the election, and not because of taxes or sudden government policy change.

The "they" in that case was the Democratic voters voting in their own state primary. Local voters have the right to choose their candidate and Lieberman did not win the primary.

However, Lieberman won as an independent in the election. So overall the state's voters still chose him over the candidate the state's Democrats preferred. Lieberman is in a very good position now, as a potential tie breaker vote in a close Senate.

Jamie,

Are you referring to those few wacky terrorists who killed over 3,000 innocent people in the World Trade Centers, crashed a jumbo jet into our Pentagon, and, but for the extreme courage of some passengers, almost flew a jumbo jet into our White House or Capital Building? Those wacky terrorists? Maybe it's that wacky president over in Iran who wants to "wipe Isreal from the face of the planet". You know, the one enriching all the uranium. I disagree with plenty of the Republicans and the Presidents actions, policies, etc., but being tough with terrorists is one area we can't waiver. These people want to kill us. I'm afraid nothing short of a few smuggled in soviet nukes going off is going to make this clear to people. Too bad it'll be too late at that point. Sorry for the drama, but this one thing more than any other scares me sick.

Bolton is as good as gone. Wait till you see the wormy grease ball they will replace him with. The world sees everything stupid we do as weakness. We need somebody with a backbone that is strong. If we want respect, we need to have the right people in place. In other words, people like Rice needs to go.

I'm referring to any US leader who bases their policy on pleasing or not pleasing terrorists.

IOW, anyone who fails to take worthwhile action because of a perception that it will make them "seem weak" to someone else, is not smart enough to be running foreign policy.

In individual cases it may or may not make sense to employ diplomacy and negotiation. That judgment cannot be wisely made by anyone who lets themselves be controlled by knee-jerk thinking.

Cheers,
-Jamie

Lieberman was a incumbent, the Democratic party allowed and supported people running against him.

Hebrewman was looking out for Israel by supporting the Iraq war. He doesn't want it spilling over in to Israel. Insurgents (terrorists) with nothing to do pouring in to israel wouldn't be good for Israel.

The truth is, the US needs to stop supporting Israel. They have the bomb, and they have god on their side, they don't need US. This would clear up a lot of our middle east problems.

we tried to start the ball rolling with prop 89 here in CA. Got smashed badly.

It takes money to fight money.

That's pure bullshit! With the tax cuts, if you have children you are getting a lot more money back than you did in the former administration. Most Americans got more money back because of the tax cuts, including you LaMont! The rich will always be able to get out of paying a lot of taxes by percentage. Both parties have seen to that. Quit kidding your self. Your stuck in the blame game, you need to see the truth. WE have the best government MONEY CAN BUY!

There should be no income taxes! There is no true representation. It was a war time thing that the politicians wouldn't let go of once the greedy bastards got their hands on the money. Let stop paying for IRS agents!!!!

If there is an income tax really needed, it should be a strait fair flat tax. What is currently considered poverty levels should be raised to realistic levels. People that are at a poverty level should not have to pay any taxes.

"Im with the Bush-Cheney team, and I'm here to stop the count."

Those were the words John Bolton yelled as he burst into a Tallahassee library on Saturday, Dec. 9, 2000, where local election workers were recounting ballots cast in Florida's disputed presidential race between George W. Bush and Al Gore.

You know more about energy than I ever will, but from what I read clean energy is way, way, way off as a viable replacement for hydrocarbons. Obviously it's a great idea to get the ball rolling, for political and environmental reasons, but it's going to be a long time. I'm also personally all for exploiting domestic energy stores AS LONG AS THEY ARE TIED TO CONSERVATION PROGRAMS. And they should be paid for by gas taxes so all the soccer moms I see driving a Ford Explorer 'Osama Special' on I-95 will be footing the bill for their largess.

As far as negotiating with terrorists, the US has not only negotiated with terrorists before we have trained, paid, and provisioned terrorists all over the world. Sometimes we trained actual insurgents (Nicaragua), sometimes irregular state supported terrorists (El Salvador, Iran), sometimes actual open state terror (Dominican Republic). Ironically, or tragically depending on your opinion, Saddam was one of the bloodthirsty state mass murderers we funded for a very long time and Osama (along with nearly every thug in Afghanistan at one point or another) was greatly helped by US and US approved Pakistani money and training. So we're fine with terrorists on a moral and practical level, and have treated with them constantly since at least WW II, we just don't like being the recipient of the terror.

Then you should know...

You think the United States does not derive economic benefit from having its currency serve as the dominant international reserve currency?

You think the big oil companies are in favor of the switch to euro based of millions in PAC funds. It may only effect 0.5% - 8% of GDP but it will have a far greater effect on major oil. Have you noticed that whatever is good for major oil seems to be what good for America.

This is not just about Dems vs Repubs. Since Clinton's Marc Rich pardon, Clinton has also found a place on my shit list.

Oil and money, money and oil.

It's a double edged sword. A stronger dollar makes imports cheaper for the US and makes anything we export more expensive to other countries. The US government right now would like nothing more than to see the yuan stronger v. the dollar to do _something_ to rectify the account deficit we have with China. So it's not a one way deal.

Nobody can quantify what, if any, difference the 'petrodollar' makes in the relative strength of the dollar. I can say this, when markets get scared and capital 'flight to quality' starts nobody loads up on assets in Nigeria and Bolivia. I think that's because, as screwed up as our economy is sometimes, we're still _by far_ the largest and most stable economy in the world. Here's a fed chart for the dollar vs. G-10 currencies.

<http://minneapolisfed.org/Research/data/us/charts/exc1.cfm> which shows the dollar losing over 20% of its value over four years. No food riots, no mass unemployment, nothing of the sort. Even if one assumes 10% of the value of the dollar is from being a reserve currency (which is absurdly high) that would put us back to being roughly where we were against G-10 currencies in 1997, which that chart uses as its 100 value.

I'm no economist, but what happens when the Chinese and/or Japanese decide to cash in their bonds? Other than influence in our government, isn't the only reason they don't now is because their economies depend on our fat ass consumption of their products.

Doesn't it make sense that the day the US consumer is so in dept and broke that they can no longer buy Asian products by the gazillion, they will no longer have a reason to keep they're $$ here. Won't they just go prop someone else's economy up. Then what?

Remember, I agreed that all of the debt is bad. Whenever I hear republicans complaining about how democrats tax everything too much I always think that's preferable to running up trillions of dollars of debt. Which is what Bush II has done masterfully.

In the 'good old days' the idea of national debt was that it was held by the public. So in essence the government borrowed from it's own citizens. That hasn't been true for a long time, and yes, there is always more risk with foreign ownership of that debt. Right now it's in the interests of all parties to keep the US afloat. I think that will be true for a very, very long time, so I file 'China shows up and demands cash of California' in the same risk folder as 'I get hit by meteor' and 'I bang Maria Sharapova.' But yes, there is always some risk when so much national debt is held overseas, but to me by far the greater problem is the debt itself, regardless of who owns it.

And, by the way, whenever someone starts to tell you that the freemasons or the trilateral commission or AIPAC really run the US government, keep in mind that the house of Saud has close to a trillion of US treasuries they keep here. That's just treasuries, not other investments and properties, and so forth. I'd guess that gets some phone calls answered.

Mike Whitney is, how you say in eenglish? Blithering eejit. I think he's the source of a lot of this nonsense. He was pushing the Iranian oil exchange as the end of the world as we know it a while back. Look at the Mpls. fed chart. Our economy, and the world economy, have problems, but if we're going down it won't be because some people start buying oil using euros.

perception of weakness is invitation to attack, plain and simple and we are now (especially now) perceived as weak and undecided. I'm predicting that we are going to be catastrophically attacked soon and that it will come as a result of an intelligence failure due to democrats restricting the ability of the NSA to wiretap. I hope I'm wrong.

Sure, I hope you're wrong, too, Deej. Like me, you've been wrong before so there's reason to hope. ;^)

The prediction that we will be attacked again has been made many times before this election. And if/when we are attacked next it will probably have been planned before this election.

But should it happen I'm sure a lot of cable TV blatherers will tell you it's the fault of this election anyway. Flawed logic is still logic and there's no goat like a scapegoat when the blatherers don't want to face the possibility of other causes, like poorly considered policy and action by whoever's not being scapegoated.

We've suffered al-Qaeda attacks under both Democratic and Republican presidents. Worse under Republicans with 9/11, but go ahead and blame BOTH the Clinton and Bush Jr. administrations, or if it really makes you feel better, just blame Clinton and give Bush a pass.

Personally I can blame foreign policy back at least to WWI for contributing to the setup of this situation. So IMO there's plenty of blame to go around through many administrations in both major parties - for those times we're in a blaming mood.

For those times when we can get BEYOND being in a blaming mood, the assumption that one party or another is eager to invite attack is presumptuous. Surely there are at least a few real patriots left in BOTH major parties AND the minor parties.

There are different ways to attempt to meet any threat, diffuse the threat and find solutions for any situation. Maybe, just maybe, we'll get some further options on the table now to meet this threat, and maybe, just maybe, they'll work better than the current approach which has hardly been flawless.

Whatever we do, let's not allow ourselves to be manipulated by terrorists into strutting around acting like overcompensating insecure spendthrift fools while undercutting our own democracy with shifty eyed abject fear - IOW, becoming terrorized. Fear sells, but maybe, just maybe, we're better than that.

The best way to be strong is to come together, work together and choose from the widest array of effective options.

Cheers,
-Jamie

and a healthy fear of a real threat will keep you alive whereas you can die by living in the fantasy world of an idealistic anachronism, or you can face reality, deal with it for the time being and have something left to argue over once the dust clears.

Those are two of many choices. Black and white in a multi-colored world.

Concern and awareness are useful when focused to motivate planning and forethought that translates into appropriate action, no dispute from me on that. You can call that "healthy fear" if you like, at the risk of confusing it with unhealthy fear.

It's dangerously possible, through fear, to react with insufficient thought and understanding, and make a bad situation worse.

Ask a military planner. Fear is the path to panic, not the basis for sound policy or strategy. Ask any dictator, fear is an effective way to enslave.

"...the only thing we have to fear is fear itself" FDR in another context.

At any rate, it would be inaccurate to imply that anyone who doesn't agree with a particular course of action is blind, deaf and dumb to potential threats. Not a true nor useful characterization. Divisive at best. And dividing ourselves IS one road to defeat.

It's important to recognize what hasn't worked, to be open to better ideas. So we can, together, find solutions that help our country and our planet achieve peace.

The first step toward getting out of a hole is to stop digging. That may be one message of this election.

Cheers,

Ask any military planner and he will tell you that without the weapons to do the job he will not be able to do it.

"...the only thing we have to fear is fear itself" FDR in another context.

This was from Roosevelts first inagural and referred to an economic depression. He was trying to keep people from withdrawing their money from the banks. He certainly wasn't talking about a shooting war/spies and sabatoeurs.

>At any rate, it would be inaccurate to imply that anyone who doesn't agree

It would be inaccurate to imply that wars have not always required great sacrifices from the citizenry of the respective combatants.

>Not a true nor useful characterization. Divisive at best. And dividing ourselves IS one road to defeat.<

I agree 100%. It seems that half the folks in this country believe we are in a war, the other half don't. This is a sure recipe for disaster, especially in a war with an enemy who uses our own laws against us. To ignore this in an era where one person with a bomb can wipe out an entire city is a recipe for disaster on an unimaginable scale.

No one has advocated military disarmament in this thread.

My point is that it's important to operate from a position of strength derived from rational planning, rather than fear-based, panicked, knee-jerk responses, the latter being open to direct manipulation by terrorists (and by self-serving politicians, for that matter). Can we not agree on that?

Exactly, and I noted the different context. However the quote is germane.

Speaking of ex-presidents and war, Eisenhower said this:

"This conjunction of an immense military establishment and a large arms industry is new in the American experience. The total influence-economic, political, even spiritual-is felt in every city, every state house, every office of the Federal government. We recognize the imperative need for this development. Yet we must not fail to comprehend its grave implications. Our toil, resources and livelihood are all involved; so is the very structure of our society.

In the councils of government, we must guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the military-industrial complex. The potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power exists and will persist.

We must never let the weight of this combination endanger our liberties or democratic processes. We should take nothing for granted only an alert and knowledgeable citizenry can compel the proper meshing of huge industrial and military machinery of defense with our peaceful methods and goals, so that security and liberty may prosper together."

>> At any rate, it would be inaccurate to imply that anyone who doesn't agree >> with a particular course of action is blind, deaf and dumb to potential >> threats. <

OK, we agree on that, right?

> It would be inaccurate to imply that wars have not always required great > sacrifices from the citizenry of the respective combatants.

Right, no one has advocated a sacrifice-free response in this thread.
Although our current president and congress have actively worked to make it seem like little sacrifice has been required by, for the first time in history (correct me if I'm wrong), cutting taxes in time of war. Of course this only delays the sacrifice a generation or two.

We should, however, be very aware and careful to not sacrifice the essence of American freedom and human rights to the altar of terrorism.

Then we can be united despite our differences. Like a composite material with fibers in different layers running in different directions we can be bonded together, stronger for our union. :^)

IOW, it's OK that we sometimes think differently, as long as we listen to each other, respect each other and can consider each other's viewpoints. We can draw on all of our strengths to innovate workable solutions.

The price of freedom is eternal vigilance. We must defend BOTH against a crafty enemy AND against those who would sacrifice the ideals and freedoms of our country. We must not lose the war in order to win the battle. And we must not lose that battle.

We must choose paths that serve both our citizens and the people of the world, not those that best serve the military industrial complexes of the world's nations, nor the short term interests of short-sighted international corporations, nor the power ambitions of a any obsessive wannabe despots. This will take leadership in a style not seen for quite a while in these parts.

Fear-based thinking on either side of a conflict props up illegitimate power.

This is among the top dangers of major aspects of our current course. While trying to appear "not weak" we run the risk of making it easy for those against us to use our missteps, missed opportunities and overreactions to literally scare up more and more followers.

As part of a well considered and comprehensive defense, we must interrupt this dynamic. To not do so would be to fight with one arm tied behind our back.

We need to think very long term, we need to look at alleviating root causes of conflict and we need to consider the best interests of the nations and citizens involved. As long as we don't, we are fighting without a complete defense and we are in danger of blundering into trap after trap, draining our resources and weakening our position.

Cheers,
-Jamie

this is the 800lb gorilla to be sure, but as far as Franklin oes, would he have advocated exercising one's freedom to walk into a plague infested area, simply because it is ones' right to travel freely? Sure, you can do it. and you will likely die. What we are facing is much more akin to a plague than any conventional threat and it should be treated like one. In order to do this it must be detected and prevented. the only way to do this is by forensic means..but this particular plague has intelligence so letting it know what you are doing to prevent it will cause it to mutate much faster and more effectively than any microbe could ever do.

Jamie,

I didn't imply that you were "blind, deaf and dumb". I respect your discourse, and strong defense of your views. I just feel the current situation involves more than "a few wacky terrorists". Also, just because I recognize there is a real, and likely threat of more attacks here in the US, doesn't mean I'm an "overcompensating insecure spendthrift fool" undercutting our own democracy with shifty eyed abject fear". I do understand though that this isn't some war between two countries, where we can "negotiate" an end to hostilities, or simply drop our support for Israel, or change our policy and make everything better. Whether it was decades of failed U.S. policy or not, these people want us dead right now, and we have to be proactive. Once we do something significant about our borders and make sure we have the absolute best intelligence, defense, and law enforcement agencies money can buy, then we can talk about long term programs to make everyone "like us". Sorry, gotta go. It's lower body workout day. I have to be in shape for all that "knee jerking"! ;>)

Ike is a fascinating one. The most recent (and likely last) president who kinda sorta fit the classical model of a politician. He was a general, a political moderate, a reader, writer, and even a painter. He respected the constitution and the separation of powers, and was thus personally opposed to McCarthy but did little to stop what was a Congressional matter. What's odd was that he helped oversee the transformation of our state from a flawed but generally improving republic into the empire it became by the time he left office. Then, in that last speech, he suddenly felt something. Remorse? Regret? Concern? And gave us the 'military-industrial complex.' Interestingly, the original drafts had the phrase as 'military-industrial-congressional complex' which is quite more accurate as we see our congress funding Navy installations in home district in Nebraska while transport vehicles in Iraq are not armored. But I guess even Ike wasn't feeling _that_ guilty, or he was talked down from including our noble representatives in his thoughtful complex.

But nevertheless Ike has always fascinated me, far more than other 20th century presidents like Kennedy or Truman or even Roosevelt. As we learn more about just how reckless JFK was, politically as well as personally, the mild mannered moderate conservatism of Eisenhower seems compelling. But one also has to wonder why, if he knew what was happening, he didn't warn of that military-industrial complex earlier and actually do something to fight it. By the time he retired, the goose was pretty much cooked, to all of our neverending detriment.

Hey Tony,

I never said anything about "a few wacky terrorists."

I was speaking of the wacky beliefs of a few terrorists, a very different concept.

If we act in our best interest and the leadership of al-Qaeda happens think we're being "weak" in so doing, it would be stupid for us to be thusly manipulated to act to our detriment just to impress those few terrorists.

We should act out of strength of purpose, clear vision and as much wisdom as we can gather, being true to our ideals, regardless of the wacky beliefs of a few terrorists.

More than one expert on the region has criticized our lack of long term preplanning in Iraq before going in. We're now in a situation that the current (for the moment) policy architects did not anticipate nor prepare for, and it's not a great situation. Many lives lost and $300 billion tax dollars later, more lives and dollars every day, significant tax money unaccounted for, Iran gaining influence in Iraq, these sorts of consequences have been a significant factor in this election. Voters are asking hard questions, as well they should.

Our various policies directly affect the region and so we must carefully consider their effect. We will never have perfect intelligence systems, a perfectly impenetrable border, flawless law enforcement and a blanket defense against everything nor can we afford that. We can work in that direction within what we can afford but we must also work in other directions to help create peace. There is a balance. Anyone who preaches that there is only ONE avenue of action is probably making money on that avenue or listening to someone who does.

Yes you can recognize the possibility of additional attacks on the US without subscribing to the notion that we have to behave shortsightedly and predictably in order to impress a few terrorists with our "non-weakness."

Consider that that kind of stubbornness and inability to see creative solutions can actually make us miss opportunities to become stronger and more successful, and to help create a better situation for ourselves and for people who live in the region.

Am I being more clear?

Cheers,
-Jamie

There are elements of the Patriot act; our move toward justifying torture; and aspects to wholesale wiretapping of American citizens that are very unamerican IMO.

We must be extremely careful that we do not permanently lose our place in history as a great step forward in personal freedom and opportunity.
Either by some nutcase reducing St. Louis to a nuclear wasteland or by some other nutcase legislating away our core ideals. I don't care how sincere the nutcase, those are both extremely damaging actions to America.

This is not an easy problem, so we need every viable idea on the table and we need to come together with respect. And we need to remember:

"Those who would give up Essential Liberty to purchase a little Temporary Safety, deserve neither Liberty nor Safety." -Ben Franklin.

Like I said Jamie, once we get a handle on at least fixing the big holes in our homeland security we can then work on long term solutions to why they hate us so. Hell, I don't even care if we work on the long term at the same time, just get to work on the immediate security stuff now.

Yes, we should act in our best interest. I believe appearing weak to terrorists will not be in our best interest. I'm sorry, I'll have to agree to disagree with you on this point.

Iraq has been a dismal abyss. Saddam ruled with a genocidal iron fist, and it appears that was the only thing keeping the Sunnis, Shiites, and Kurds from tearing each other up. Now it looks like that will happen anyway. The problem there is so huge and complicated, that I don't have hope anyone can "fix" it. We didn't create the "real" problem though. We just removed Hussein so the various divisions in Iraq could get back to their centuries old civil war unimpeded.

I don't believe being tough with terrorists should be our only course of action. We need to explore all avenues to work toward better relations in the Middle East, and all around the world. Take care of protecting ourselves right now, and I'm all over the making friends thing.

I must have mis-interpreted your "wacky beliefs of a few terrorists" statement. I thought you were implying that our risk from terrorists is not real, or something we need not aggressively address.

I have a hypothetical question for you Jamie. If by some miracle we could reverse all the failed policy and all of our mis-steps, Israel went away, basically remove any and all reasons for the terrorists to hate us, what if after all that, they still hate us and want us dead? What if it really is a war of ideology? What if the "infidels" really must convert or die? What then? I don't wish anyone to die by war, aggression or violence, but at what point do we decide to either fight or lay down and wait to die. I pray to God that this isn't the case. I hope somehow we can find common ground and live in peace with everyone. I haven't heard the terrorists ever express this option though.

I anticipate your response, but will refrain from replying back. You have much greater debating skills than I, and besides, I've already broken my promise not to get involved in political threads. I'm such an opinionated ass! ;>)

With Respect,

Tony

We actually did create Hussein, but I referring to the "real" problem right at this vary moment, which is more about Iraqies killing Iraqies, than about them not wanting us there. They want us out, so the real slughter can begin.
Sorry, I was affraid I didn't make that vary clear.

Kinda, but don't forget that modern day Iraq was imposed from the outside by others:

"Iraq was carved out of the Ottoman Empire by the French and British as agreed in the Sykes-Picot Agreement. On 11 November 1920 it became a League of Nations mandate under British control with the name "State of Iraq".

The British government laid out the political and constitutional Iraq and defined the territorial limits of Iraq without taking into account the aspirations of the different ethnic and religious groups in the country, in particular those of the Kurds to the north. Britain had to put down a major revolt against its policies between 1920 and 1922."

More: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/History_of_Iraq

And don't forget that Saddam came to power with our help and assistance, as part of our cold war policies:

"In 1958, a year after Saddam had joined the Ba'ath party, army officers led by General Abdul Karim Qassim overthrew Faisal II of Iraq. The Ba'athists opposed the new government, and in 1959, Saddam was involved in the attempted United States-backed plot to assassinate Qassim.[12] Saddam was shot in the leg, but escaped to Tikrit with the help of CIA and Egyptian intelligence agents. Saddam then crossed into Syria and was transferred to Beirut for a brief CIA training course. From there he moved to Cairo where he made frequent visits to the American embassy.
During this time the CIA placed him in a upper-class apartment observed by CIA and Egyptian operatives. (UPI 'analysis' article)
He was sentenced to death in absentia. Saddam studied law at the Cairo University during his exile.

Rise to power

Concerned about Qassim's growing ties to Communists, the CIA gave assistance to the Ba'ath Party and other regime opponents.[5] Army officers with ties to the Ba'ath Party overthrew Qassim in a coup in 1963. Ba'athist leaders were appointed to the cabinet and Abdul Salam Arif became president. Arif dismissed and arrested the Ba'athist leaders later that year. Saddam returned to Iraq, but was imprisoned in 1964. He escaped prison in 1967 and quickly became a leading member of the party.
In 1968, Saddam participated in a bloodless coup led by Ahmad Hassan al-Bakr that overthrew Abdul Rahman Arif. al-Bakr was named president and Saddam was named his deputy. Saddam soon became the regime's strongman. According to biographers, Saddam never forgot the tensions within the first Ba'athist government, which informed his measures to promote Ba'ath party unity as well as his ruthless resolve to maintain power and programs to ensure social stability."

Sure it's real. And it's intertwined with Western involvement in the region as mentioned above. Forget that and you lose sight of reality and end up in a blind boogiemans fight. The danger there is the boogiemans becomes this unknown terror that can grow in your head. This way lies madness. If both sides do that, and they have to some extent, it becomes an escalating hatfield mccoys thing, as in Israel - with no end in sight and the whole world eventually in the balance.

There have been statements but it's hard to put much stake in them. However you can likely read them for yourself on the net, it's at least interesting to see what Osama's stated reasons are for using terrorist actions, and what he says it would take to make them stop. Keeping in mind that he has lied before.

However it is important to understand the needs of people in the region so we don't inadvertently walk into the trap of setting ourselves up as the perceived bad guys, thus encouraging what we don't want, which is more people being convinced to join al-Qaeda.

Have you ever seen the sorcerer's apprentice bit in Fantasia? Good intentions and amazing power isn't enough, we have to be smart about our policies. We have to understand the power we wield and be as aware and as proactive as possible about unintended consequences.

There are interesting tidbits here, including rumors of Osama's death:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Osama_bin_Laden

As to your question, I am not interested in reliving the crusades now, in the year 2006. I think very few people are, unless whipped up into self righteous fervor by ardent nationalism to the point of jingoism, (in place of patriotism). Whipped up for the benefit of some wannabe despot or someone's short term financial gain at great expense to the world. I think we may finally be getting to the point where such intentions can be seen through. The challenge is to recognize and head that stuff off. Be aware of the tools of dictatorship anywhere such manipulations appear.

But since you asked, I will not convert forcibly to anyone else's religion. Not Osama's take on it nor Bob Jone's take on it. And I'd thank any corrupt or ignorant politicians, wannabe despots, wannabe afterlife virgin collectors and ill-informed uberfundamentalists everywhere to quit fighting and killing each other over matters of God. How absurd, ironic and pathetic. Live with integrity, find your potential, walk your spiritual path and respect the rights of others to do the same.

I believe in freedom of religion, which is guaranteed by our constitution and is our right in any case. Believe what you feel is true, but respect the right of others to do so as well.

Be free to talk and listen, communication is essential and freedom of speech is another basic human right. But remember that your right to swing your fist ends before my face begins. Don't tread on me, bucko.

I also believe in personal responsibility. Mine and that of every citizen that wants our great experiment to continue. We face threats to our system both external and internal and must be ever vigilant. We must be proactive, intelligent and constantly educate ourselves using multiple sources. We must not be manipulated into betraying our rights.

Yep I believe in freedom. Don't even think of taking that away. If you agree, let's stand together.

Opinions are great, thanks for sharing. And listening. I appreciate the conversation.

I've said it before, but there is nothing more dangerous than someone who refuses to take people at their word. Appeasers do not gain peace; rather they end up in a corner with no option other than the big red button...

What do you think will happen to the democrats if another major attack happens on our soil?

Will they morph into uber-hawks? Will they give away Israel?

The next few years will be interesting to say the least.

Simple. Yeah...

It would be great to get beyond black and white thinking. Beyond characterizations that rely on false dichotomies. No amount of straw men will protect us.

Sure, such simplisiticity fits in with the views of those itching to revisit the crusades. But does that seem like a really, really smart strategy in 2006? The crusades created piles of dead bodies and we have such better weapons now. Can't we be just a little bit smarter almost a thousand years later?

Using the Hitler appeasement argument is like fitting Cinderella's sister's bloated foot into Cinderella's petite shoes. The shoe doesn't really fit. There are some similarities between these situations, but many differences. It would be limiting to cling to that one point of view, pretending that some straw man is the only other point of view, and sadly actively avoid considering the vaster spectrum of perspectives available. From which may come other, more viable solutions. With potentially better results than we are currently experiencing.

I hope we will have the benefit of a wider range of views on these and other problems for the next couple of years. There's at least a chance of that now, but it's by no means certain. I wonder what the switch at sec of defense really means. I'm guardedly hopeful.

The last few years have, unfortunately, been more than "interesting."

You know Don, I really wish I could live in your world instead of the actual world. As you note, things are simple there, even something as complex as 'terrorism' and its motivations/manifestations. Not that I expect this to make much of a dent to DonWelt, but the most flamboyant kind of terrorism, suicide bombing, has been shown to be far more political than religious in motivation. I've read this superb book, but here's a story about it that you can read for free.

http://www.boston.com/ae/books/articles/2005/07/03/why_do_suicide_bombers_do_it/

The only part that religion plays is that civil wars that involve different religions tend to have more suicide bombers, or suicide bombers at all. This isn't unique to any one religion, and in the Lebanese civil war that started modern suicide attacks 70% of the suicide bombers were--take a seat please--Christians, though most of them came from secular groups.

So yes, the 'threat of terror' is real, and I'm sure the next big attack against the US is well into the R&D stages. But it's anything but simple to pull off a major terrorist operation, and anything but simple to stop one, and in the larger picture applying simple answers to complex questions gets us into stupid wars with countries that, until we attacked them, had no history of producing anti-American terrorists.

Some lefties (and paleo-conservatives like me) argue that Bush 43 is the worst president ever. I don't happen to think so, I'd say he's probably one of the five worst but he can't compare to some of the real stinkers. Martin van Buren (though a superb secretary of state) was a disaster, McKinley our first taster of imperium, but for me by far the worst president ever was Woodrow Wilson, who discarded the Monroe Doctrine, manipulated us into WW I, and helped fashion the stupendously idiotic treaty at Versailles that all but demanded another great European war. It shows what a bastard he was that I didn't even get around to his support for the KKK and anti-semitism in one sentence. Nevertheless, the worst thing he did was create the language and thought processes that have been used ever since to make Americans think our country is somehow more than just another country in the world, prone to the same kinds of mistakes and missteps that the rest of history is littered with. European writers call it 'American exceptionalism' and Wilson provided the crucial vocabulary to make it possible. GW Bush's speeches these days sound like Wilson carefully rewritten for someone with major problems speaking in public. All of which is a warmup to another article by a Wilson hating paleo-conservative. This from Bill Lind, who puts the paleo in paleo-conservative and openly refers to himself as a monarchist. Just a little 'outside the box' thinking on Iraq.

There is absolutely no difference between the two in the minds of those committing the acts.

Just watch the trailer for Obsession.

Terrorism is indeed complex. The choice as to the magnitude of the threat, and the likely success of various approaches to it, is quite simple really. You either take the assertions of the leaders of terrorism seriously or you do not.

Read it. Not very impressed.

Now you read "Because They Hate"

As most of the Irish terrorists have been. Now compare those attacks to these in number and scope:

Make sure you check out the stats page.

Ok, so what is your plan? Obviously, the other side has failed in your mind, so I would love to hear an alternative. Remember that americans and millions of others around the world expect a plan that reflects your view, stated above, that Give me a reason to care what European writers think.

Tell me why you care in particular.

The last election went the way it did, not because Bush was wrong, stupid, or evil, but because he does not know how to lead, and there may be no solution in the Middle East at any rate. Years ago, we could have started a crash program to get our own oil resources and develop alternatives but no, we blew it just like we blew all the chances to get OBL.

Now we will pay for ALL the stupidity of both sides.

I know you have little faith in the left or the Dems, so you must feel about as cheery as I do concerning the next few years...
