I have one, but if I could do it over, I'd get either a Presonus Central Station or even a Colman Audio monitor control, as both of those are passive.

The Big Knob has nice features and is very convenient, but it does send your signal through an extra amplification stage.

Yea, so I hear, and also it causes quite a snakes nest of cables onto your desk as well. Thanks for the heads up guys. While we're on the Presonus subject, can someone speak for the digimax LT?

http://www.presonus.com/digimax_lt.html#diagrams

I'm looking for a decent/affordable 8 channel pre with lightpipe and this seems to fit the bill. Anyone using this out there is Paris land?

Thanks

Rob,

I have a Central Station and love it FWIW. All switching is done with sealed silver contact relays and the DA converter sounds nicer than the MEC outputs. Probably not as nice as a DAC-1, but still quite good.

I've heard some good things about the digimax LT. Basically that it was solid for the price. I have a friend who actually really likes the Mackie Onyx 800R. Maybe a little more money, but supposedly sounds pretty nice. I need to get over to his place and check it out for myself. Anyway, try to buy from a dealer who will let you return it if it doesn't suit you.

I know a guy who has the regular Digimax (not LT), and FWIW he says it's OK, but really lacking in the headroom department.

The Digimax is clean but sterile and does not like to be pushed at all.
It has some cool features such as monitor through but for sound it really is about as exciting as a blank piece of paper.

You believe all the info you read online?? Mostly from bedroom fruity loop, pirated software users?

There are other sites and forums who has nothing but praise for the Mackie Big K..

I love the unit and I choose it over the Prosonus..

a friend has one and it definitely colors the sound. i recently persuaded him to take it out of the audio chain and the highs came back and the bottom end was de hyped.

I would give the guys at Gearslutz the benefit of the doubt, most of the time.

And I know from experience that Mackie gear is almost always something best kept out of the signal chain. I feel the same way about Presonus, FWIW.

I have done comparisons between my apogee da-16X connected directly to monitors, and going through the mackie. The mackie adds a bit of low level noise, and smears the low end compared to the direct signal. It definitely does not give you exactly what you put into it. It may not make a difference with low end converters, but you can hear it with the apogeas plain as day. I plan to upgrade, most likely to the Colman, when funds allow.
