Hey,

Been busily adding old Led Z to my iPod, and it reminded me of something I noticed back when I first bought LZ III. Did anyone else notice a change in Robert Plant's voice between II and III? I was noticing how full and throaty his high notes are on the first two albums, like on "Communication Breakdown" and "The Lemon Song," and it seems like starting on III his high range got kind of squeaky and falsetto-ish. Did he fry his throat a bit on their early tours? Was the real Robert Plant replaced by an alien? Am I just imagining the whole thing?

Stay tuned for these and other terribly important questions on the next episode of How Sarah Wastes Her Precious Spare Time.

could it be that the acoustic songs reveal different spectral components of his voice? His voice on Immigrant Song wails just like the early stuff right?

No, see that's a good example of what I'm talking about. I always thought that "Aaaaaaaa-aah!" from Immigrant Song sounded like falsetto, and kinda wimpy. Compare that to the long "Baaaaaaaaaaaaabe!" after the first solo break in The Lemon Song (about 2:25 in).

Stuff like this is why Zep is my favorite R & R band.

There's an annoying little ad at the beginning of this. After that is's major thunder and lightning.

Bonzo will never die.

Yeah, love that guy. He hits his drums really hard. :) And Bob's in fine voice there.

Yeah,

Ol' Bob hit some pretty good high ones didn't he? This was around 1980, long after the Zep III album. I'm with you though, Bob lost some of his upper range zing after Zep II.

Bonzo wasn't really the "basher" that most people think of him as... yeah he had a big drum sound, but i think that was partly due to the 26" kick, and the way he tuned his snare (which was a metal one - which makes a difference, as well); he really had a lot of subtle finesse that he doesn't get much credit for. Look closely at that video clip you posted - he's not hammering with as much velocity as you might think!

Hardest-hitting drummer that I EVER saw was someone you wouldn't even think would play that way - at least based on his style - and that was Neil Peart of Rush... check it:

Check out the overhead shot at 1:26, and then the cutaway/side-shot at 1:29... his sticks are moving like THREE TIMES the distance of Bonham's in the video clip you posted for Kashmir! And that's not even as hard as he used to hit 'em, either.

Neil (who's favorite Zep song is "Achilles' Last Stand" - see link below of an amateur video montage assembled over the studio cut of this song... a great Bonham track!)
