Wolfgang Grajonca, aka Bill Graham, was a notorious obsessive. But he loved what he did, and we are now all his beneficiaries because one of his obsessions was that he kept everything from all his shows. Everything.

It was all stashed in a warehouse; nobody even knew what was there, and after Graham died in a helicopter crash in 1991 nobody knew what to do with it, or didn't want to invest the time to find out what was there. After passing thru several owners, businessman & music fan Bill Sagan bought the whole 'mess' for about $1.5 million. It was piled over 25 feet high in that warehouse. It took TWENTY-FIVE tractor trailer rigs to carry it all to its new home where Sagan began digging thru and cataloging what he'd bought.

He found:

Original Contracts signed by the artists

Mint condition super-rare posters; some worth $15k each today

Handbills

Unused tickets

Over a million slides, negatives and photographs.

Then one day while poking thru it Sagan found what he'd never even dreamed of: Bill Graham had even saved the concerts themselves. He'd made video & high res audio recordings of thousands of shows! Sagan is not even sure, but it might be over 7,000 recordings in number.

He is selling some of it thru the above website. He is also making available "Vault Radio" where you can click on the link and listen (free) to some of those recordings in a rotation that includes dozens of those recordings.

Just click on "vault radio" Priceless....
