Last night there was a tornado of a party across the street. Houseful of 20 something dudes in full on party mode. Apparently from what I could gather from the 100 decibel conversation level, the jack was flowing , the weed was killer and no one had mastered smoke on the water on an out of tune guitar as of 4am. Best line of the evening, said in a dead on spicolli voice "Dude, welcome to our humble abode".

i don't know if the williamston michigan tornados hit your news but that's us. some poor couple who moved in that day to their new house died that night when their house was put into their pond by the storm. it's a stroke of luck that more were not hurt as the bulk of the 150 yr old trees fell between buildings, though there are a lot of newly made ranch homes in the area.

This is really tragic stuff. Did you know them? Glad you're OK.....or what passes for OK given what we already know about you.

;o}

only from the news. 2 months ago the sister was murdered by an ex boyfriend who came up from indiana for the murder/suicide. and the other brother who was killed last month in a car accident.

we drove through the town yesterday...what a mess. almost every block looks like a war zone and the park with the volunteer built playscape and 150+ yr old tress are all gone. amazingly, other than the two who died there were no other serious injuries.

yeah, we're fine.

WHAT!!!!???? ;oO.....man!!!.....that's downright freakin' unbelievable!!! Reminds me of some stuff in my family. All of my mom's siblings and their kids (except for one) died in strange and tragic ways....not quite as "back-to-back" as this particular situation, but just as bizarre.

About 10 years ago a monster tornado levelled a part of a little town north of Austin called Jarrell. I went up there to see if I could help. there really wasn't anything to do because there was nothing left in the area where the tornado hit.

Glad you're OK dood.
