Hi Steve,

You can only automate mutes and volume on aux returns.

In the Automation Editor click "mute" , and make sure FX is highlighted to see the aux return levels and muting. Panning is not an option here which can be a bummer.

If you need to automate an aux send, set up another audio track within your mixer and copy the audio that needs automation to it. Set up a prefade send to the aux effect that needs muting. Mute the whole track to automate the send. Keep the fader on that track to lowest or "off". This also allows you to send a different eq/insert fx to the effect bus you are automating if needed.

Good luck,
Tom

Where is the automation of mutes for the 8 busses displayed? I have some of the mutes popping on with my busses during the tune and don't know where they are displayed so I can erase the mutes.

Here's what's going on..... The way that I automated THIS song was, hitting the edit and automate buttons on the Master Mixer Subs and automated them with the mouse. Somehow I accidentally hit a mute. Now when ever that part of the song comes up, that sub mutes (drums). Can't have that. I don't see where in the auto editor that these subes are, or any evidence of mutes that I can erase with the eraser.

Hi Steve,

I was just about to recommend checking the automation editor. I don't have my system fired up, but I thought I recalled that you can select aux's and submix's in that editor in addition to the channels. Glad you figured it out.
