eping it off already.

Erghh... indeed. ;o) Actually in all honesty I feel quite good. I went to this pub where you got a gift pack that included these hangover cure tablets, which I was quite confident would not work, but remarkably I drunk heavily for about 8 hours straight and feel quite good today. And that's despite my sleep being interrupted by the heat. (yesterday was 42 degrees C... hottest NYE ever here).

But onward and upward. A Happy New Year to all out in Paris land. Here's hoping you all make some good music, buy some good gear, see some good bands, have some good times, and whatever else tickles your fancy. :o)

Cheers,

Ah, you guys too. Though it's dropped to high 20's here today. Phew. I don't know what it got to yesterday. Last I checked the BOM site it was 41.7 or something at around 4:30... 44 is rrrrEALLY silly.

Cheers,
Kim.

I use ADAT optical connections between DAWS to do this most of the time.

older "in windows" that you set the record path to.

I'll bet it's there. If it is, open a new project and add the audio file.

more intuitive than Avid, Edius, etc, with a similar workflow to native DAWs (easy to click, drag, fade, crossfade, clips etc - this requires a key/mouse combination in most other NLE's). Premiere is is a great program, but is finicky about system config (i.e. I don't recommend installing it on the same system as an audio app like Cubase, etc, but it can work). Vegas can sync to MTC.

FCP is great if you are on a Mac, but I find Vegas' workflow faster (I have it on my Nuendo system and just switch back and forth at will). That said, Vegas approach is different than the standard Avid approach (which IMHO, is convoluted and poorly thought out, unless you like multiple key commands for every action) so if your goal is to be ready to work in other production houses editing, Avid Express might be a good idea to learn, then use Vegas for actual work. I'm writing a review of it for Audiomidi.com right now as well as using it for a documentary and several other projects - the review probably won't be online until February though.

Regards,
Dedicas wrong as this sounds, all the horse farmers I know (alot) have used the equine version of the vaccine on themselves, often with their vet's assistance, with no side effects. gotta get the dose right though. they all firmly believe that if it won't kill a horse it will be okay for humans, moreso that if it's tested in mice etc.
