I have made quite a few long drives in my life. I thought that probably the most gruelling drive I had ever made was back in 1972 when I drove nonstop from Austin to Chetumal. Yesterday I drove nonstop from Columbus Ohio to La Junta Colorado.

I was on I70 and crossing the remainder of Ohio, Indiana and Missouri didn't really seem to take that long.....then I entered Kansas. I never thought it would end.....almost like there was some sort of time warp where I'd drive for 100 miles and the next road sign would say that the next stop was 200 miles further away than I thought it was.

Unbelievable!!.....and flat.....I think the definition of flat in Webster's should have a picture of I70 crossing Kansas. I wonder if the early pioneers who crossed Kansas in their covered wagons thought that it was weird to see endless miles of prairie occasionally interspersed with anti-abortion signs which are strung out on incremental billboards along the highway sort of like old Burma shave ads, then absolutely nothing for the next 50 miles, then suddenly an adult sex toy/video superstore popping up out of the void, only to be followed 50 miles later by more Burma shave-like anti-abortion ads.....and I wonder if they got sick of hearing 70's music on every radio station. By the time I got out of Kansas about 9:00 last night, I felt like I had driven 20 years backward in time.

Absolutely surreal, twilight zone kinda' day.

Yep. The middle of the country be flat. Really flat.

It's kinda like Vegas, where you think that you can walk to Paris from the Trop in something like 15 minutes because it doesn't look that far, does it, dear?

37 hours later, when you've managed to make it to the Harley Cafe', you realize that you need to drag your ass over to the monorail or you're going to pass out somewhere before you hit Aladdin from the 112 degree heat.

When I moved out here from Nashville, I drove a moving truck all the way. Not so bad out of Tennessee and Missouri, but then we hit Kansas.

Kansas is uphill all the way going west for anyone who's never driven that stretch of I-70. To get near the speed limit (okay 15mph shy at 50), I had to floor it and keep it there - it just poked along at 50, dead on, not a wiggle, not a hint of 51 or 49. One stretch (between gas stops) was 4 hours of nothing changing inside the truck or out. I almost thought of putting a box on the accelerator and moving to the passenger seat to read a book...just to be sure time hadn't stopped.

"There's no place like home. There's no place like home." Really? Was OZ that bad?

Deej, now you know precisely why I chose Kansas when I wrote the following a few weeks back on the general "column."

Provocative discussion on Cavuto today, FOXnews; neogtiating with OBL. Several notions were batted around on both sides but one guy pretty much spoke my mind when he asked "what kind of negotiation can be had where the starting point is that each party knows the other party wants the other one dead as soon as possible?"

After that segment, I started thinking of "Running Man" because that's what OBL already is. I wondered what he might settle for if he knew the handwriting is on the wall. If I were as sinister as the mindset in the aforementioned movie, I think I'd have no problem with offering OBL the following deal:

1. Turn yourself over to us.
2. We arrest you for one day at most in a nice federal safehouse.
3. We talk for several minutes about whatever you like.
4. We give you $100k in twenties and a $300 Haliburton brief case.
5. You get a couple of good meals and good night's rest.
6. You are released at 610 N Main Street in Russell, Kansas the next day at 9AM.
7. API gets the lowdown at 9:15 AM on our "deal" except that your location is not announced.
9. Go wherever you like, stay as long there as you like.
10. Kansas is kinda big.
11. The tallest wheat is west of town.
12. The first bus comes at 10:02 AM.
13. Good luck.

And how is 70 anymore? The last time I traversed the country on 70 was 1990...R-coast to L-coast, stayed at Rod's place for a day in KC. I don't know if they've spent any money on 70 since then but I'd say it was THE WORST interstate ending in Zero we had at that time and had been that way for 10 years.

I'll add this positive aspect of Kansas; I enjoyed EVERY firework display in the state Colorado on the evening of July 4, 1990 and I saw all of them from, you guessed it, Kansas. Somewhere in that same trip, I was almost sucked of the road by a Tornado that wiped out a good bit of Limon area, CO.

Hey Mark....remember when we accidently dialed Afganastan or somewhere like that when you were at my house? I think you were trying to show me some trick on the phone that had to do with counting a certain number of seconds before hitting the last number.

P.S Just got back from vacation, and am leaving for Vegas in the morn for a corperate gig. Back Tues night. Man.....I had some withdrawls from this place.

Bogota as I recall. And it wasn't trickery at play... it was an MCI calling card number that ended in a sequence which confused KC local routing for national domestic LD with international dialing, specifically, Columbia, South America country code. That was a weird day. As Nic Cage said in Con Air while that brand new corvette was dangling at 400 feet like an empty cereal box off the back of that C-130, "On any other day, that would seem entirely unusual" but that whole weekend was just odd, including the drive through KS and CO the next day.

Hey, Rod you weren't with SW the night the old 20-ton straight truck gel'd up diesel between LV and Reno, were you?

This is a funny post, because it's so true. I have done I-70 through Kansas many many times - 3 times within the last year. I don't remember any *without* the friggin' crosswind blowing 30 mph. I highly recommend the Red Sun chinese buffet's Mongolian BBQ in Hays, it's by the Walmart off the highway. If you're heading west during the daytime and it's clear, it's kinda cool to look up and watch all of the airplane trails heading west.... rows of lines pointing to Denver.

I've driven across Texas north-to-south (Amarillo to Brownsville) and east-to-west (both Texarkana to El Paso and Beaumont to El Paso) and "perceptually", it didn't seem to take as long as driving across Kansas. Perhaps it's because the terrain changes make it seem like you're actually making some kind of progress rather than sitting in your car with the engine running while moving backwards in time.

I've heard that OZ is actually worse. If you're talking about crossing the middle of Australia that is. 52 degrees (don't know what that is in fahrenheit) and the occasional motel / petrol pump, and the likelihood of a kangaroo jumping out in front of you and introducing your front suspension to your firewall.

So I've heard anyway...

Kansas, now that sounds like fun. Or hey, Nevada, in a supercharged Challenger. Just like in the movie, except without the cops and the dying and the car exploding and stuff.

Stewart.

Yah, but you usually can't see farther than 50' there because of the clouds of mosquitoes (the provincial bird)... ;-)

Kansas is uphill all the way going west for anyone who's never driven that stretch of I-70.

I had a feeling like I was struggling with some unknown force the whole time.....and now I know what.....gravity!! It makes sense. Heading west, you're definitely slowly climbing toward the foothills of the Rocky Mountains.....soooo.....I guess if I was seeded east, I could put the car in neutral and just coast across Kansas?

Oh man, I hear ya about Vegas. It's forced perspective in reverse. They make everything so huge it looks closer together! Sure honey. Let's just walk over to the Hard Rock. It doesn't look that far. Ha! We almost died! "Drinks in the snack-a-teria, on me." ;>)

It sounds like Nebraska. On one trip to visit my uncle in Snowmass Village, CO, I left Iowa on I-80, got West of Omaha, set the cruise, and went to sleep. I woke up six hours later to the welcome to Colorado sign! Talk about a straight, flat road! ;>)

In Nebraska I-80 follows the Platte river valley, a long gentle descent bringing Rocky Mountain runoff to the Missouri river. The route is a part of the Oregon trail. It became a logical place to put a relatively safe, easy driving interstate. You could ALMOST drive it on auto-pilot but there are a few curves here and there. :^)

Since many folks only experience Nebraska by driving through on I-80, a common misconception is to equate Nebraska with that drive.

Nebraska has other terrain. For example, there are vast sandhill areas in the west. In the North East you'll find hills left behind by glaciation from the last ice age. The East has interesting river bluff country along the Missouri river and its tributaries. Nebraska, birthplace of Arbor Day, also has a large man-made national forest.

I like the open spaces in the West. We have some incredible areas. With our demanding, busy lives it's often hard not to just blaze through them with this or that destination in mind, but sometimes it's worth slowing down and exploring along the way.

Cheers,

I've driven thorough Western Nebraska many times when I was touring and it does have some interesting topology. I was just being facetious. It's an old joke with my family how boring that I-80 drive is as we've made the trip a hundred times.

You sound a little like Alice Cooper in Wayne's World, explaining the history of Milwaukee!

"Nebraska, birthplace of Arbor Day . . ." I'm not worthy! ;>)

Heh. Yeah, if Alice grew up in Nebraska. Sorry I went all pedantic on ya Tony.

I've made the drive a zillion times, too. Did I mention the many clean Nebraska rest stops, with maps, weather/road reports and abstract sculpture displays. I, uh, oh, sorry. :^)

I've also spent a fair amount of time going to and from to New Mexico, Arizona, Southern California, Northern California, Oregon and Washington. Lots of great country along the way. I really like the drive through DeeJ's four corners area. And the vast stretches of I-80 through Utah and Nevada. Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, great country. And of course, Colorado.

OK, now I'm itchin' for a road trip!

Cheers,

I know what you meant Jamie. It's the same when people judge Iowa by the I-80 drive only. They think the whole state is just gently rolling corn and soybean fields. What a minute . . . It is! ;>) Naw, if you look hard enough we have some pretty stuff too.

Yeah,

Pennsylvania was a pretty long stretch.....but at least there is = some variety to the terrain. what I found annoying about Pennsylvavnia = was that apparently the highway department there assumes that everyone = who is driving on the highways is familir with Pennsylvania. The = interstate highway names change without any signs at these changes which = tell you where the *new* highway goes. If you are driving on Interstate = 84W coming out of NY state, it just ends at Interstate 81 North or = South. You have to know that interstate 81 N actually goes west and = intersects Interstate 80 west or that interstate 81 south connects to = Interstate 76 W, but if you're actually trying to find I70 West, there = is no sign that says "Pittsburg.....this way" so that you know that = this will happen. It's pretty easy to end up taking an unexpected detour = through the Poconos (which ain't bad, but can be annoying if you aren't = really wanting to do this. Also, the Interstates in Pennsylvania, NY and = Ohio are under construction for long stretches. I was driving through = Pennsylvania and NY on Friday and the construction delays really sucked. =

There were lost of commuters around Pittsburgh on Friday afternoon who = were going postal. At one point, I sat stock still on I 76 for over an = hour. The line of cars in front of me was so long that by the time = traffic started moving again, what ever had been delaying things had = totally disappeared without a trace. No way to know if it was a wreck of = what.

I've driven across Texas north-to-south (Amarillo to Brownsville) = and

east-to-west (both Texarkana to El Paso and Beaumont to El Paso) and "perceptually", it didn't seem to take as long as driving across = Kansas.

Perhaps it's because the terrain changes make it seem like you're = actually making some kind of progress rather than sitting in your car with = the engine running while moving backwards in time.

I don't think I was there during that time period. I can't believe you remember all that stuff in that much detail.

I'm in Vegas right now. I'll be back home late tonight.

We had that EXACT same experience! Decided to walk to the Hofbrauhaus and the Hard Rock from the Trop. Didn't look that far.

You're right. I'm sure what we walked ended up being 376 miles.

And then we walked back. Guess we worked off the food and the Frappaccinos at Starbucks.....

We whimped out and took a cab back. Same walk though, from the Tropicana to the Hard Rock. I thought we were going to have to stop and get a room for the night. ;>)

Yeah, and then there's gettin on the Jersey Turnpike with nothing but diarrhea and a small plastic container with a 3/4" opening.... don't think about this too long... move along, there's nothing to see here, just move along... nothing to see. Except maybe "variety to the terrain."

Yeah,

Pennsylvania was a pretty long stretch.....but at least there is some variety to the terrain.

I remember 20 years or so ago driving through Iowa (where THE most prolific signage pertains to the travel of deer) and noticing the backwards antlers on ALL of the signs. Yep... major foul-up. The antlers ran from the middle of their foreheads, backwards over their ears and then up. Hilarious. It made national news a few days later.
