I'm not a huuuuuge fan, but Springsteen is untouchable. He channels something very powerful.

I don't think one need be a fan to be in awe of his gift, and his band. I'm not a fan at all, but I cannot but be blown away by the power of the whole thing.

I don't think personal taste is always of much use in recognizing genius. Taste is taste, but some things transcend taste.

Absolutely worth viewing on PBS:

Performance, vibe, musicianship and sound, all great.

I like about 5 songs by him. Secret Garden is my favorite. But live he doesn't do it for me. I just saw him on a late night show and I was pretty bored.
To me it's just a bunch of strumming. Back to my Spyro Gyra and ZZTop.

Steel Mill). Growing up in NJ and a member of several NJ shore bands myself, I was around during the early days and sat in on a few early rehearsals in the chicken coops in Freehold NJ. One of my bands warmed up for Bruce at

Most of my memories of that period are somewhat blurred by the many inappropriate activities of the time, but I do remember music being fun.

The new record and the PBS concert are not typical Springsteen. This music
(The Seeger Sessions) is a mix of folk, folk-rock, Cajun/Zydeco, New Orleans Jazz, Gospel, etc. This music touched me on many levels. I hope to see it live.
