to have 1G L2 cache and the cheapest one is 2 GHz which I am assuming means 2GHz x 2 or 4Ghz and the most expensive one is 2.4GHz so I'm assuming that this means it's possible of achieving around 5GHz if nudged a little.

So what's the diff between an unnamed 3800, a Manchester and a Toledo. Does this have something to do with the chip architecture. Which would be preferable if the operating frequency was equal?

Mr. Simplicity is getting antsy for more horses for the Cubase machine.

;o)I had some trouble with mine with one pair of SATA ports not working and had to send it back, which took two attempts, and the turnaround per attempt was ten days, so I've only just got a new one last week and gotten back on it.

That said, it seems a very nice board. One thing I have noticed is that BIOS versions after version 6 don't have nearly as much IRQ control. They seem to have irradiated the whole IRQ menu... plus something in my setup isn't happy with those versions and my machine wont even boot mostly with those versions (7-9). Not sure if it's the EDS cards or what.

On BIOS V6 though she steams along. The only time it's hung at all is when I was fiddling with drive setups in the computer management area of control panel (partition management) and had an explorer window open with one of the drives I was fiddling with, which I can understand it not being happy about.

I've had a world of hurt getting to where I am and it's not over yet, but I think the board itself is good. I think once I get it working nicely I'll be on a good thing. I'm very interested on how you go with later firmwares (7+) and EDS cards if you try it.

Cheers,
Kim.

54 boards are a single buss board so you won't see the performance of the 939 based boards. You will also have a limited upgrade path. No Dual core and a hard limit on processor upgrades. Save your money for the 939 based ones. They are far from cutting edge at this point. Just the Dual core chips are.

ThanksDepends on your OS.. on win98/ME, anything more than 256MB is not doing much if anything - anything over 512 will actually hurt your performance w/o some mods to the OS. WinXP needs 512MB to run effeciently, and I've got my personal XP box running 1 GB of it. I do, however, load my systems down pretty hard and build them to specifically do certain tasks so I'm probably not the norm.

Apparently the owl got away from her and was hiding out, waiting for a chance to make a break for it. Usually a cat scratch will kill an animal within a day or two so obviously Mr. Owl wasn't injured. These feathers are definitely matches for the owl feathers so it looks like there was a bit of a dust up and the owl won, or at least held it's own.

If not what do we need to do to make this happen?

Nah, it's just more detailed/clear, IMO.

NeilDJ, do you know if Mike C will do these mods for anyone else?
I'd like to mod a PPA 2ube for a lower noise floor and slightly smoother presence.
