Funding requests unmet

Federal hurricane protection funding for New Orleans has been lower than the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' requests. Here's a look at flood control projects:

Wetlands are not a sufficient barrier between a city and water, and the fact that part of New Orleans was built on filled in marshlands doesn't help - saturated ground, surrounded by water, below water line is prime territory for flooding - it's only a matter of time. There were many articles and speculation that New Orleans could not survive a major hurricane - the city was living on borrowed time unfortunately. All the political blame in the world won't change the fact that this disaster happened because of New Orleans location. Blaming the government for this disaster is no more grounded than blaming a the secretary of defense for allowing a tornado to wipe out a farm in Kansas. Research also takes a bit of objectivity, both scientific and political.

I'm with you guys on environmental conservation - the more the better

If I had posted 2 weeks ago that a Metro city would be wiped out and Bush wouldn't get anyone a meal or a drink for 5-6 days, you would have thought I was crazy.

Now that it happens and you're willing to completely absolved FEMA of their

More fallacy. The fed supercedes the states when it comes to emergency

Did the tsunami victims fill out paperwork before the gov stepped in? Did Iraq fill out paperwork requesting the troops before the gov stepped in?

Partisan crap? Check yourself. When You're absolutely crazy Deej.

My thoughts have been formed the last week primarily viewing mainstream network news.

You're stuck in partisan mode, and somehow you think it's rubbing off on me. When I was living in New Orleans in the 80's there was a lot of discussion about how the depletion of the water table was actually causing the city to sink even farther below sea level.

The original city (the French Quarter and the area long St. Charles and Carrollton known locally as uptown) survived this and always has survived hurricanes. This is because the original founders of the city recognized that they needed to build on the high ground. The surrounding suburbs are drained wetlands. This whole area used to be a large dry knoll surrounded by something similar to the everglades.

JMWeak????.....You are taking your facts from and article by the LA Times for chrissakes!!!!

As for the Howard Dean analogy, just listen to yourself. You sound like a parrot of the left and all I see you post here are trolls promoting a certain philosophy that is centered around hating Bush, but at the same time denying that you have any partisan agenda.....sor of like Howard Dean's following quotes:

"I don't hate Republicans as individuals. But I hate what the Republicans are doing to this country. I really do."

followed by :

I hate Republicans and everything they stand for.

There's more and whenever I see one of your posts like this I just shake my head because I know what's coming. It's as predictable as listening to a speech by Howard Dean. You know what's coming and you know why because you've heard it all before.

I guess I could blog your posts and those by Dean and find similar and different positions, but the bottom line similarities are the staleness of the same old crap.....bomb throwing based on an unquestioned agenda which seeks to justify itself by the end justifying the means while denying any attempt at balancing the agenda with reality.

LA Times was the ones that put the information into a nice graph.

I'll attach the full image, per your very special request.

I think there is always credibility to a number of news sources, depending on what they are reporting. Even the LA times. Politically speaking, if you take the LA times and balance it's coverage with that of any number of other news sources, you are likely to get something approximating reality, but never from just one news source. For me to quote ffrom an approved list would be bogus because I don't have one. I look at numerous sources and try to cull a semblance of reality from different points of view. You post articles here by a single source that happens to support your view. Fair enough. It's suspect though because it's the same old crap every time. I see no attempt at objectivity.....bitch

Exactly. So how do you rectify that with your outrage at my source, solely based on the source? You want to talk about credibility, yours is being ripped to shreds, by your own logic.

Keep in mind I'm not a journalist. I'm a person with an opinion. Its not my job to be objective.

Fixing the leaks

Amid an outcry over the federal failure to heed warnings about the New Orleans levee system, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers reported progress in plugging leaks in three canals. Here's a look:

*As reported by FEMA

How levees are being repaired

Metal wall cuts flow from rain-swollen Lake Pontchartrain, allowing levee repairs. It will be removed once breach is repaired.

Funding requests unmet

Federal hurricane protection funding for New Orleans has been lower than the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' requests. Here's a look at flood control projects:

I get the feeling you might just be copping out, but since you seem to be asking me a question, I guess I can spell it out again.

You initially dismissed the simple information graph because it said LA Times on it, then when pressed as to your preferred credible sources, you said LA Times could be credible, and that all sources need to be considered and balanced.

So your initial dismissal of the info was the bogus part.

I'm in the process of setting up 10 mics for a tracking session but I'm going to take a second here to clairfy your out - of -context spin of my statement.

I said that there is always credibility to a number of new sources depending on what they are reporting. The obvious bias of the LA times calls their agenda into question. Had you been at all objective in your thinking, you might have looked to more than one source before showing your ass with something like this.

Now, whether you beileve it or not, I've got work to do.

LOL... that's the funniest shit I've ever read. Guard's in Iraq, but it's needed here

By CARL HIAASEN

New Orleans is now nearly as dangerous and chaotic as Baghdad, where about 5,000 Louisiana National Guard soldiers have been helplessly watching the hurricane tragedy back home on television.

Their presence would have been mighty useful in deterring the looters on Canal Street and restoring order, but that task now falls to a better-late-than-never coalition of Guardsmen summoned from other states.

The same is true in devastated Mississippi, which has a state National Guard brigade attached to the II Marine Expeditionary Force in Iraq. As a result, two battalions from the Alabama Guard were ordered to back up the 1,600 Mississippi Guardsmen who've been mobilized since Katrina struck.

It's another high price to be paid for the woefully mismanaged war in Iraq -- the cities of our own homeland have been left to fend for themselves after catastrophe strikes.

Everybody in south Miami-Dade who went through Hurricane Andrew in 1992 well remembers that the turmoil and lawlessness subsided only after the National Guard arrived.

Although it took too long for the main force to get here, the problem wasn't a troop shortage caused by a contrived faraway war. The problem was a sluggish government response.

Thats my hometown man.... Alternately known as The Union Leader / The Useless Leader.

Either way it's the #1 paper in the state by far and almost 100% conservative i.e. Pro Bush 1 / Anti Clinton... always Pro Republican senators and Anti Democratic governors.

Nackey Loeb has taught me a lot about politics.Sorry amigo. I never failed to do anything other than play by some arbitrary rule you have tried to esatblish here. As I said, I listen to many sources. Once armed soldiers were finally posted on street corners, most of the looters lost their nerve. Those who hadn't already stolen a VCR or stereo speakers suddenly decided they didn't need them.

Among law-abiding citizens, an atmosphere that could almost be described as calm set in when the Guard took over the job of distributing food, water and ice. Surely no sight was more comforting to the desperate thousands who'd felt so isolated and forgotten in Andrew's dreadful aftermath. Yet nothing we experienced here in South Florida compares to the widespread bedlam and despair now gripping New Orleans and other areas of the Gulf Coast. Katrina made Andrew look like a pipsqueak.

On television the scenes are virtually too staggering to absorb, crosscutting from those breathtakingly heroic rescues to the almost-casual rampage of looting.

To snatch from a shuttered store a few boxes of food, medicine or clothes for one's family is nothing but an act of survival; loading up on DVD players, jewelry and firearms is pure idiot thievery.

By this weekend, up to 30,000 National Guard troops from the coastal states and around the country were supposed to be heading toward the Gulf Coast.

That's not nearly enough.

The disaster zone is simply too vast (99,000 square miles), too ravaged and too far gone toward anarchy. What's needed is basically a domestic army of occupation.

As late as last Thursday, there were only 2,800 Guardsmen on the ground in New Orleans. Yet the U.S. Central Command said there were no plans to shift U.S. troops from Iraq to Louisiana and Mississippi.

That means recovery will depend on Guard units borrowed from other states, which are already stretched to

For real...

I meant to say that in parenthesis.Hey all,

The problems this disaster has exposed go way beyond anything the federal govt. or the president have anything to do with.

Entrenched, multi-generational corruption, patronage, cronyism, ticket-punching bureaocrats, incompetence, cowardice, and more corruption, all of it at the local and state levels is where the primary responsibility lies.

No president, from any party, would have done a lot better. Sorry.

Kanye West is as dishonest as can be, and he, and you, Jason, are race-pimping the blame where it does not belong. It is despicable and pathetic. There were BLACK heroes all over NO, who, without fanfare, a new SUV, or any bling, went around saving lives, getting people out of attics and off of roofs. Others, faced with the same needs and opportunities to serve others, instead became evil predators, and scum like Kanye and other race-pimps excuse them, EXCUSE them, with their hate for the president. It's just like the Rodney riots, some do good, some do evil, but instead of condemning the evil, the race pimps excuse it and blame the president.

Understand this: I care much less about the insults and lies told about Bush than I care about the great, big-hearted black people

You can't praise the heroes without acknowledging that black people have the ability to choose love and righteousness in a time of evil, so heroes are ignored so the race-hustlers can take another dump on the president.

Shame on you.

If Clinton was in power, hell if Giuliani was in power, we certainly would have had a more inspiring leader, and that is important, but things would still be about where they are right now.

ade after decade, to poor people in general and the descendants of African slaves in particular. The world sees New Orleans burning and dying today, but the televised anarchy - the shooting and looting, needless deaths, helpless rage and maddening governmental incompetence - was centuries in the making.

To the casual viewer, the situation is an incomprehensible mess that raises questions about the intelligence, sanity and moral worth of those trapped in the city. Why didn't those people evacuate before the hurricane? Why don't they just walk out of town now? And why should anyone care about people who are stealing and fighting the police?

That hard, unsympathetic view is the traditional American response to the poverty, ignorance and rage that afflict many of us whose great-great-grandparents once made up the captive African slave labor pool. In far too many cities, including New Orleans, the marching orders on the front lines of American race relations are to control and contain the very poor in ghettos as cheaply as possible; ignore them completely if possible; and call in the troops if the brutes get out of line.

By almost every statistical measure, New Orleans is a bad place to be poor. Half the city's households make less than $28,000 a year, and 28% of the population lives in poverty.

In the late 1990s, the state's school systems ranked dead last in the nation in the number of computers per student (1 per 88), and Louisiana has the nation' s second-highest percentage of adults who never finished high school. By the state's own measure, 47% of the public schools in New Orleans rank as "academically unacceptable."

And Louisiana is the only one of the 50 states where the state legislature doesn't allocate money to pay for the legal defense of indigent defendants. The Associated Press reported this year that it's not unusual for poor people charged with crimes to stay in jail for nine months before getting a lawyer appointed.

These government failures are not merely a matter of incompetence. Louisiana and New Orleans have a long, well-known reputation for corruption: as former congressman Billy Tauzin once put it, "half of Louisiana is under water and the other half is under indictment."

That's putting it mildly. Adjusted for population size, the state ranks third in the number of elected officials convicted of crimes (Mississippi is No. 1). Recent scandals include the conviction of 14 state judges and an FBI raid on the business and personal files of a Louisiana congressman.

In 1991, a notoriously corrupt Democrat named Edwin Edwards ran for governor against Republican David Duke, a former head of the Ku Klux Klan. Edwards, whose winning campaign included bumper stickers saying "Elect the Crook," is currently serving a 10-year prison sentence for taking bribes from casino owners. Duke recently completed his own prison term for tax fraud.

The rot included the New Orleans Police Department, which in the 1990s had the dubious distinction of being the nation's most corrupt police force and the least effective: the city had the highest murder rate in America. More than 50 officers were eventually convicted of crimes including murder, rape and robbery; two are currently on Death Row.

The decision to subject an entire population to poverty, ignorance, injustice and government corruption as a way of life has its ugly moments, as the world is now seeing. New Orleans officials issued an almost cynical evacuation order in a city where they know full well that thousands have no car, no money for airfare or an interstate bus, no credit cards for hotels, and therefore no way to leave town before the deadly storm and flood arrived.

The authorities provided no transportation out of the danger zone, apparently figuring the neglected thousands would somehow weather the storm in their uninsured, low-lying shacks and public housing projects. The poor were expected to remain invisible at the bottom of the pecking order and somehow weather the storm.

But the flood confounded the plan, and the world began to see a tide of human misery rising from the water - ragged, sick, desperate and disorderly. Some foraged for food, some took advantage of the chaos to commit crimes. All in all, they acted exactly the way you could predict people would act who have been locked up in a ghetto for generations.

The world also saw the breezy indifference with which government officials treated these tens of thousands of sick and dying citizens, even as the scope of the disaster became clear. President Bush initially shunned the Gulf Coast and headed to political fund-raisers in the West.

That left matters in the bumbling hands of the director of emergency management, Michael Brown, who ranks No. 1 on the list of officials who ought to be fired when the crisis has passed. Even as local officials were publicly reporting assaults, fires and bedlam at local hospitals, Brown took to the airwaves to declare that "things are going well" as mayhem engulfed the city. When asked about the rising death toll, Brown attributed it to "people who did not heed the advance warnings." Brown's smug ignorance of the conditions of the place he was tasked to save became the final door slammed on the trap that tens of thousands of the city's poorest found themselves.

The challenge for America is to remember the faces of the evacuees who will surely be ushered back into a black hole of public indifference as soon as the White House and local officials can manage it. While pledging ourselves to remember their mistreatment and fight for their cause, we should also be sure to cast a searching, skeptical eye on the money that Bush has pledged for rebuilding.

Ten billion dollars are about to pass into the sticky hands of politicians in the No. 1 and No. 3 most corrupt states in America. Worried about looting? You ain't seen nothing yet.

OK, this has degenerated into the typical name calling BS that most NG's turn to. I haven't read a single goddam thing about Paris in awhile on here.

Why don't you take your political crap over to general or find another NG to spew this shit in.

Bottom line, what are you PERSONALLY doing to help the situation?

Talk is cheap, especially political BS. Have you got evacuees in your town? Are you doing anything to help? I do and I am.

.....and I take personal offense at you calling my buddy Doug an asshole. Namecalling is the last resort of the chickenshit, so take it somewhere else or do it to someone's face instead of shooting off your mouth on a forum. I guarantee you'll have quite a different experience.

dammit dude, chill out and actually do something to help. This political tirade crap is tiresome. We all bleed red. This is about humanity, not politics.

You're good. This is how it works with the XP install.

;o)

My Shezero drivers show up under System Devices not Sound, Video and = Game Controllers

on XP. Is this normal??

My Ensoniq Paris MIDI driver does show up under Sound, Video and Game =
Controllers though.

Everything seems to be working right except the external inserts.
