I'm getting Crashbasket fitted for an articulated stifle brace.

These guys are in Denver. I'll probably arrive Thursday night, get his leg casted on Friday, they will build the brace Saturday, he will get fitted and adjustments Sunday and we will and leave Monday.

I'm probably going to be pretty hotel bound in the meantime since he's not going to be extremely mobile, but I'm thinking about renting a minivan so that he will have plenty of room and if it's not too cold, we could probably grab a bite while he hangs in the van or something. He's short haired so I can't leave him in the cold for too long.

We get to meet Crashbasket!! Count me in.

Right now it looks like Friday or Sunday could work.

We could order takeout or just have lunch at the hotel so the Crasher doesn't have to ride around in the cold.

That would work. If we take him out in public we'll eventually get surrounded by throngs of people as everyone who sees him will first say "Wow!!!...that's the biggest dog I've ever seen" and then want to come over and pet him (something he loves), ask how tall he is, how much he weighs and those who have previously owned Great Danes will start talking about how cool their Great Dane was and some of them will start to cry.

It always happens

I'll let you know where we're gonna be staying.

I'm pretty sure I could make it up that way Friday or Saturday - Sunday might be tough as I think I'm tied up that morning until 1 or so, and then again that evening.

I would offer to bring our Newfy for a doggy playdate, but probably not a good idea for Crash at the moment :-)

I'm sure Crash would love to play with your Newfie, but he's getting a bit lame in one leg right now so maybe not a good idea this goaround.

I'm checking on doggie friendly hotels in the vicinity of the place we will be getting the work done. I'll let you guys know when I know.

I want to see Macy's new studio while I'm there. Crash is a very well behaved studio hound. He's right at home amongst racks of gear, although he can create some pretty high SPL if he decides to offer up and opinion.

I'm way up for seeing John's new place, too. Still haven't made it over there (except once long ago, the first time he ran that place).

Saturday I'll be in Boulder to try and learn something about EV batteries at the next Denver Electric Vehicle Council meeting.

Well, I think it's very nice of me to invite us over there ;oD, but just to be sure, I think John may need to weigh in on this.

I'm in--I just wiped the day free on Friday. I have a gig at Lannies that evening with a late afternoon loadin, but am good till then. Saturday is pretty hectic, as is Sunday...

And Crash is welcome at the studio of course... :)

Sounds great, John - next Friday it is!

So DeeJ, what's Crash's schedule that day? When do you want to get together.

A few years ago I ran across this gal in Petsmart with three Great Danes with her... one of 'em was absolutely enormous - the others were normal, good-sized for their breed. She was wearing a rescue service jacket of some kind & I asked her if they were pets or working dogs; she said they used them for finding people that were lost in the mountains up in Big Bend Nat'l Forest east of here. I remarked that I hadn't known that Danes were used for tracking, and she said they could track OK, but they mainly used them because they're so robust & can take that kind of terrain for long periods of time. So, the bigger & stronger they can get 'em, the better for their purposes, I guess... and that one pooch was frickin' enormous!

I saw a documentary about those dogs. During one part of it they had set them on the trail of a little girl who had gotten lost in the park. One of the dogs found her and stayed with her all night. the little girl said that it was so noble of the dog to have curled up with her to keep her warm. Amy and I laughed our butts off when we heard that. We know better. That dog was cold and he was using that little girl for a heating pad. Ours do it on a regular basis.
