Worst mistake of my life. I wish I had never been born. I can't even begin to describe how badly this POS has hosed my system. If it wasn't for Ghost, I'd be slitting my wrists right about now.

I'm going to find whoever is responsible for wrtiting the drivers for this pile of crap, stake them out over an ant bed, cover them with honey and laugh my ass off as they are devoured alive.....then I'm gonna go find their kids.

I'll do the kids first and make him watch. I've had to go back a few generations in Ghost to get to a configuration that will allow me to reload the VIA AGP driver and then the P750 loaded from the onboard Windows driver and now everything seems to work great. It was the newest driver from Matrox's website that hosed me.....so now I only have to reload all my RME drivers, UAD-1 software and every *in VSTi I've got here, which, of course, means reregistering them all. This is going to take at least a full day out of my life. The reason I got the P750 was to have something more contemporary to work with when troubleshooting all the crackling crap that's happening in my cubase SX rig. Hopefully it will helpI should send Matrox a bill for a days work.

I will not run Matrox drivers on my G450.. even BT called them 'marginally evil' back when it was the thing to buy for Paris, period. Does the 750 allow for native drivers man? I'd sure be trying that, and don't forget Windows Update.com if XP doesn't see them properly.

The reason I loaded the drivers from the Matrox site was because I am running a very dated version of Win XP (pre SP-1) It's low on code bloat so I like it. I did DL SP-1 and DX9 and added these, but I didn't think this OS was recent enough to have native XP drivers for the P750. Turns out it does have them.....unhappily I discovered this too late. I'm going to be spending all day Saturday getting my native system back up to speed. So far, the native P750 drivers seem to be doing OK.

There's a simple way to prevent this . . . don't buy Matrox cards. Ever again.

Also, if this is the worst mistake in your life good for you. The worst mistake in my life involved a quart of tequila, my roommate's mom, a 1997 Chevy Capris, a can of purple spray paint, and the Quinnipiac volleyball team but that's another story for another day.

I've been involved with tequila, Chevy's, and volleyball teams before so I know a little about this, but I want to know what you did with your roommate's mom and spray paint.
