My first band went through an abbreviated version of that.....3 managers in 4 years followed by a split. Luckily for us, we were so friggin poor that no one figured they could get a penny so we walked away from it.
Somewhere in the fray, my Super Reverb, Bassman, Gretsch Tennessean, and two old strats ended up going bye-bye.....but part of that was to pay the dealer (a singularly evil kinda' person.even during the Summer Of Love) so that he wouldn't kill the girlfriend of the roadie who used to score the little black biphphetamine 20 capsules and other stuff that she used to buy for manager #3 so he could turn around and give it to the band members so they could stay awake long enough to practice, gig and finish their high school homework in order to keep working so that they could pay said manager his cut.. The Turtles didn't mention the dealer and the roadie's girlfriend, but I'll bet they were both part of that gig.

Gotta' love those bands.

See, you HAVE to do things that way, though - since musicians are always broke, the only way you can screw them out of money is to manufacture it in that manner & then never let 'em see any of it!

lol
