Heh.

At first glance it looked like a pair of top-heavy, falling-down drunk stumblebums lying in an alley, until it clicked and I recognized it as a scene from the latest in the "Die Hard" franchise.

I think my first impression kinda nailed it, though.

Here I was hoping it would actually be funny. If Jib Jab did a Jobs vs Gates we'd all be laughing.

James, it actually is funny to see the tables turned and the ridiculer being ridiculed. It's only not funny to the ridiculer.

No Bill, it simply wasn't funny.

Here, this is more like it.

George Bush, Vladimir Putin, Bill Gates, and Steve Jobs were called to an island by an invitation that read, "very important meeting with God" - skeptical as the 4 were, they all arrived per the instructions.

God informed them that he was very unhappy about what was going on in this world. Since things were so bad, he told the three that he was destroying the Earth in 3 days. They were all allowed to return to their homes and businesses, and tell their friends and colleagues what was happening.

God told them that; no matter what they did; he was not changing His mind.

So . . .

Bush went in and told his staff, "I have good news and bad news for you. First the good news . . . there IS a God. The bad news is that he is destroying the Earth in 3 days."

Putin went back and told his staff, "I have bad news and more bad news. The first is . . . there IS a God. The second is that he is destroying the Earth in 3 days."

Gates went back and told his staff, "I have good news and good news. First . . . God thinks I am one of the three most important people in the world. Second . . . you don't have to fix the bugs in Windows XP or Vista."

Jobs went back and told his staff, "I have puzzling news and strange but good news. First... apparently I'm not God. Second... God was wearing an iPod engraved with iGod."
