I had not checked server logs for a long time. Since I released all the plugs for free download the PC value pack has been downloaded FOUR HUNDRED TIMES. Who knew....

No, 397 of those downloads were DeeJ having to go back & get all his various software packages again after multiple reformats & reinstalls of everything.

Nope. Only once for me. I've got a big Paris folder on my office machine and I source everything from that when I reinstall 6732674327826 times.

The thing is, if there are 400 users that threw $200 at paris, all of a sudden you probably got enough for a new version of software if someone had all the source code, They could probably even figure out a way to get rid of submixes and put all the tracks in one window and more. $80,000 should be enough money to get something going.

If they just put it out in the open source community it wouldn't take any money :-)

Yeah, but are there enough to make it worth creating an OS 10 version?

They really need to do that. It's not right for them to be making money off something they are not supporting and it's just the right thing to do unless they are going to commit to something that uses this source code (FBI / NSA / IRS?), hehe oops. meant to say "Yeah, but are there enough MAC USERS to make it worth creating an OS 10 version?"

You saying if they came up with a new version you wouldn't consider throwing a $500 PC in the corner?

Oh, man... the learning curve. What is a BIOS, anyway?

Really?!?

We did a role call here a way back and got something close to 200 names on the list over a period of a couple of weeks, though many of those no longer use Paris.

400 people... that's a lot...

Cheers,
Kim.
