This is the band I'm currently recording a demo for. The clip's about a minute & half.

I like the tightness of it. And the synthy thang in the beginning is pretty cool. Drums are a mite dry in contrast to the synth. The sound stage did not sound natural, but that could a style thing.

Still I gotta ask, "What makes someone sing like that?" Bottle-fed baby? Small, um, you know? I'm just sayin'...

Yeah, it's kinda got that weird, spacey vibe in the beginning... the synthy thang is actually an e-bow.

Yeah it is... if you add a similar 'verb to the drums, they just drown, plus it keeps it more weird to have the drums sound like they're right in front of you, but the e-bow's out in space somewhere. These guys are into weird.

LOL! I have no clue - it's just the thing all the kids are doin' nowadays! :) I said to the guys: "All your stuff sounds so angry... what are you so angry about? You have jobs, you all have decent places to live, you have girlfriends, you're in a band that can actually get gigs on a regular basis....
what're you so pissed off at?"

They couldn't really answer.

Thanks. Yeah it is pretty original - albeit weird - which is why
I like working on it (for the originality, not the weirdness LOL!).

I actually kinda like it too.

When the screaming comes in I like it a little less , but it is cool.

Is everything tracked live and real instruments?

What FX you using on the vox? Just EQ to get that kinda radio/telephony F-ect?

Keep it going..sounds good.

No, not everything was tracked live... the bass & drums were, and so was a scratch guitar track (which produced the e-bow part - we kept that from the "scratch" track), but because the main guitar player switches sounds & EFX here & there, we re-did the rest of his guitar tracks for keepers later, then there's a guy in the band who's their DJ-slash-second-guitarist, and we did his parts as overdubs (which are, in this section of this song, mostly doubles & some accent hits of the first guitarist's parts). Vox, of course were all done later - there's several vocal tracks in the section you heard, split between the main singer & the bass player. All the instruments are "real", except for the toms - they're triggers... well, triggers combined with the sound of the real toms in the OH's.

As far as when the screaming comes in, yeah I should probably drop that back a bit, but this is barely in the "rough" stages, so I'm sure a couple things will change here & there.

The transistor radio/telephone-y effect on the voice is a plugin called "Quadra-Fuzz".

Yeah I thought I heard different vocalists.
I think that is pretty cool.
Sounds like egos aren't out of control in that band.
Good deal.

It was nice, was enjoying the weirdness, then that poor guy started gagging on his own larynx. Seems to be an epidemic among the hardcore vocalists. Someone should start a foundation to help these people. :)

Nicely recorded. Love the e-bow.
