
Subject: Announcement - A Paris Blog is born

Posted by Kerry Galloway on Sun, 30 Mar 2008 22:53:45 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Hello everyone.

I hope this isn't spamming, but I thought I'd set up a blog as a resource and a place for additional PARIS-related chat. Undoubtedly I'll be touching on some other topics like REAPER, Black Lion Audio's mods, bass playing and many others, but I'd like to hear what interests you in audio too.

It's my eventual goal to collect as many PARIS resources as possible into one location for my own lazy sake. To that end, I'm scavenging and organizing as much of the existing PARIS practical-knowledge-base as I can find on the internet into an additional website, which I'll put up and link from the blog as time permits. I will very much appreciate your suggestions and input on this. For example, I hope to put links to all plugins that run happily in PARIS in one place - and in some cases, where possible, even host the files themselves. Similarly skins, utilities, manuals, FAQs, tracksheets (I've made lots of new ones) etc.

I'd also like to take advantage of modern technologies like commenting, media galleries to feature mixes and pictures, polls and many others.

If you're interested, I hope you'll pop by and take a look and offer any suggestions for improvement that you care to (and then I'll let you know what I can actually implement, because it's all Blogger template-based, so it has flexibility in some areas and not others). While you're at it, if you like, you could take the first poll too so I can start getting a handle on how many users there still are.

You can leave comments in the existing threads, and we'll move to enabling more advanced community participation, like the ability to create your own threads, when I get a handle on how all the moving parts fit together. I've posted an open thread for general chat, although for the moment I'd prefer you not bring political/religious/platformwar issues there, full stop. At some point I have the sneaking hope to also set up the infrastructure for collaborative musical work.

You'll find the blog at:

<http://ensoniqparis.blogspot.com/>

There's not a ton of content there yet, but I hope you find there's some intriguing potential, and I also hope to show you some interesting stuff soon myself. I've started the ball rolling in a couple of threads.

Site policies are stated in the Welcome post, and participation signifies one's understanding and acceptance of them. You can find them at the bottom of the page, or click here to go directly to them -

<http://ensoniqparis.blogspot.com/2008/03/greetings-all.html>

They tend towards the simple common sense - you can't go wrong with the courtesy Mama lern'd ya. Making the ability to comment subject to membership in the blog and then policing the membership, or moderating comments, is technically easy with a mere few mouse-clicks; however comments won't initially be moderated until/unless I feel it's necessary.

With that in mind,. I'm hoping I won't need to spend much time weeding the garden there, and that people will voluntarily maintain standards of discourse and S/N. Like all Canadians, I do have a "special club" I keep in the family igloo, but I prefer to reserve it for times of need - say, when I fancy a pelt for a new hat.

I hope you'll stop by! Help yourself to the new PARIS tracksheets if you like, and let me know how I can make them better.

- Kerry Galloway, NOR Productions.

Subject: Re: Announcement - A Paris Blog is born
Posted by Robert on Mon, 31 Mar 2008 00:24:36 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Cool Kerry.

"Kerry Galloway" <kerrygalloway@telus.net> wrote in message news:kerrygalloway-AC0C67.15534530032008@cust0358.vic01.dataco.com.au...
> Hello everyone.

>
> I hope this isn't spamming, but I thought I'd set up a blog as a > resource and a place for additional PARIS-related chat. Undoubtedly I'll > be touching on some other topics like REAPER, Black Lion Audio's mods, > bass playing and many others, but I'd like to hear what interests you in > audio too.

>
> It's my eventual goal to collect as many PARIS resources as possible > into one location for my own lazy sake. To that end, I'm scavenging and > organizing as much of the existing PARIS practical-knowledge-base as I > can find on the internet into an additional website, which I'll put up > and link from the blog as time permits. I will very much appreciate your > suggestions and input on this. For example, I hope to put links to all > plugins that run happily in PARIS in one place - and in some cases, > where possible, even host the files themselves. Similarly skins, > utilities, manuals, FAQs, tracksheets (I've made lots of new ones) etc.

>
> I'd also like to take advantage of modern technologies like commenting, > media galleries to feature mixes and pictures, polls and many others.
>
> If you're interested, I hope you'll pop by and take a look and offer any > suggestions for improvement that you care to (and then I'll let you know > what I can actually implement, because it's all Blogger template-based, > so it has flexibility in some areas and not others). While you're at it, > if you like, you could take the first poll too so I can start getting a > handle on how many users there still are.
>
> You can leave comments in the existing threads, and we'll move to > enabling more advanced community participation, like the ability to > create your own threads, when I get a handle on how all the moving parts > fit together. I've posted an open thread for general chat, although for > the moment I'd prefer you not bring political/religious/platformwar > issues there, full stop. At some point I have the sneaking hope to also > set up the infrastructure for collaborative musical work.
>
> You'll find the blog at:
>
> <http://ensoniqparis.blogspot.com/>
>
> There's not a ton of content there yet, but I hope you find there's some > intriguing potential, and I also hope to show you some interesting stuff > soon myself. I've started the ball rolling in a couple of threads.
>
> Site policies are stated in the Welcome post, and participation > signifies one's understanding and acceptance of them. You can find them > at the bottom of the page, or click here to go directly to them -
>
> <http://ensoniqparis.blogspot.com/2008/03/greetings-all.html>
>
> They tend towards the simple common sense - you can't go wrong with the > courtesy Mama lern'd ya. Making the ability to comment subject to > membership in the blog and then policing the membership, or moderating > comments, is technically easy with a mere few mouse-clicks; however > comments won't initially be moderated until/unless I feel it's > necessary.
>
> With that in mind,. I'm hoping I won't need to spend much time weeding > the garden there, and that people will voluntarily maintain standards of > discourse and S/N. Like all Canadians, I do have a "special club" I keep > in the family igloo, but I prefer to reserve it for times of need - say, > when I fancy a pelt for a new hat.

>
> I hope you'll stop by! Help yourself to the new PARIS tracksheets if you > like, and let me know how I can make them better.
>
> - Kerry Galloway, NOR Productions.
