Maybe I'm going blind but where does it say he's in prison? I just see "

See John, "subject" writing is like headline writing. You make a quick short blurb that gets the point across in the fewest words.

When someone is convicted and likely to go to prison, headlines are often like that. Imagine "Paris goes to prison" when she got convicted. It's like that. Oh, and she actually went... Who'da thunk?

<In our case it's PARIS went to prison, and here we are! Where's my beer?>

Now if you prefer "Scooter is going to prison" you may substitute that blurb in all your future posts on this topic.

best,

Absolutely ridiculous...

i am not comfortable with Libby getting off, even though he did not out a covert agent, which was the issue at hand. If he obstructed an investigation and lied to investigators, he can go to jail, and not with Paris. (Not even with PARIS dammit!, although we can talk about GarageBand...)

But SANDY F. BURGLAR?

What a travesty of justice. And when you consider what happened to the Watergate burglars...

Sandy should be in prison.

Deeh, you're a good guy but I'm sorry this doesn't pass the first week of Logic 101. Maybe Berger should be in jail, but Libby didn't just lie under oath, he went out of his way to be arrogant both during the trial and the sentencing hearings. The judge sentenced him to more than the probation officer, who draws up sentencing recommendations for the judge in a federal case, recommended. That means the judge thought he was guilty as sin, and probably guilty of other stuff he perjured about.

If someone put Crash into a dog pit fight and got away with it, does that mean other people who run dog pits shouldn't be convicted of cruelty?

Sandy Burglar was just as guilty and just as arrogant.

I don't care about Libby, if he lied he can go to prison, but Sandy got away with murder.

I used to do archival work and NO ONE walks out of an archive with documents in their socks who does not have larceny in their hearts. His excuses were as laughable as Clintons... Maybe moreso.

Thad,

I'm not saying that Libby didn't do anything criminal. AFAIK, maybe he should have gotten 5 years. Lying to a grand jury is a big deal and those who do it should be nailed. I don't think our court system has gone completely off the deep end on that particular case, but what Berger did was so criminal that it defies all logic that the guy shouldn't have been given 20 years in Leavenworth and it really makes me wonder WTF is going on when he skates with a disbarment, a $250k fine and probation. Both of those are pretty stiff penalties for someone of lesser means, but the punishment he received would not dissuade another rich shill like Berger for taking a bullet for his boss.....especially if/when the boss is Billary (now in the guise of "Hilbilly")

You still diggin that Liquidmix thang? We need to "talk some DAW" soon. I'm specing out a new workhorse that has enough bandwidth (I think) to push 4 x UAD-1's, 3 x RME HDSP's and a Duende or Liquidmix (or maybe both). I'm going to need a PCIe FW card for this. what are you using for your LM?

You don't sentence people for being arrogant. If we did, you, me and every judge and attorney would be behind bars. The prosecutor knew where the leak came from before ever questioning Libby. They were on a political witch hunt. There was no crime. They trapped him in what is perceived to be a crime of perjury. It's questionable, and the punishment is extreme.

James, you're wrong about that. A belief that judges cannot and do not willfully err is at least as inaccurate as you are correct that arrogance exists behind the bench... the same arrogance you believe has no affect on a sentencing handed out by one arrogant judge.

And I am talking about first world democracies as are you. Any attorney will tell you that a judge will refute the sky being blue if he wants to. Judges can and do rescind jury convicted criminals and in like manner but they can't sentence someone found not guilty. The latter being the case, if a judge wants to he may control the courtroom in such a way as to shape argument in such a way as to cause a conviction that would not otherwise occur were he truly neutral on guilt or innocence.

I'll give you an example of how both attorneys and judges can and do manipulate the course of a criminal proceeding before it even begins. This is not meant to offend anyone here but I have had atty's tell me (and judges confirm their knowledge of the practice) that in a case where they know their client is guilty, the best thing a defense atty can hope for is a naturally red-headed female juror. The tested theory being that when a unanimous jury vote is required for murder (as an example) conviction, a red-headed female will, 9 of 10 times, go against the rest of the jury and defeat the possibility of a unanimous decision. Judges know this and participate in the inclusion or exclusion of such jurors. One example of many, many.

It depends on what you think of Scooter. I think that a combination of Rove/Cheney/Rice intentionally outed two active CIA case workers. I think Scooter helped them, and was the best fall guy they had. In doing so they also outed at least one CIA front company used for overseas cover, probably also used by other case workers. I think up to that point we're swimming in waters of great likelihood. If that is all more or less true, any foreign intelligence agency with a double digit average IQ and a working cell phone could find out a number of people in their country working for the CIA. What do you think happened to those people? What happened to the credibility of the next generation of case officers to tell a potential spy for the US, 'We don't play politics, we'll get you out if my cover is blown, you have the promise of the US government that there is no higher priority for our intelligence gathering.'

Not using the LM much yet. We're still mostly in the tracking stages. I'm going to start editing drums this weekend and maybe I'll play a little with it then. However, the bits and pieces I've used it on so far I gotta say I'm impressed.

First he wasn't the one that leaked it. You think a lot of things, and your jumping to a lot of conclusions. If the press is knowingly doing harm, where is the responsibility of the press in all of this? By the way, she was a desk clerk at the time, not a field agent.

Case officer, James, not agent. Agents are the foreigners they recruit, they CIA people doing the recruiting are case officers. And yes, she was at a desk at the time it happened, everyone gets pulled back to work at Langley sometimes and they almost always despise it. But it wouldn't take much ingenuity knowing she had been a case officer working for a particular front company to figure out other people involved.

And if you want to hang Robert Novak by the nuts be my guest. I'm sure you'd be howling for blood if Al Gore's office had outed a CIA officer actively working in counter terrorism to Anderson Cooper.
