I have the Neve 1073 EQ. Do I want the 33609 comp or the 1081 EQ next?

Help! They're having sale! And I have $75 credit! And I can't afford 'em both!

......and more UAD-1 cards since the compressor will use around 70% of the resources of a single card.

You need both or you will die.

Seriously...since you have the 1073eq, I'd probably go with the 33609 comp....kiks major booty on Snare. The 1081 is more versatile, since it has more bands, and you will love it, but since you have an eq, if you can't swing both,
I'd go with the comp.

Well yes...there IS that. They've got the system down, make way cool plugs that take up so much power that you need more cards. I've got 3, so far.
I think you've got 36 or 37, right?

Ha! You could always load up an old machine with 4 more cards and use FX Teleport over LAN into your main DAW. Cheaper than a Magma and gets you over the 4 card limit if it works.

FXT doesn't work with PDC on UAD-1's, or so I've heard. I guess I could get Cubase SE for my 2nd DAW though.

Indeed, that would probably work. :)

I don't think the existing authorizations would work on a 2nd box. I wonder if anyone has asked UA if there is a way around the four card limit?

I did ask them. It's the driver. It could be amended, but at the time I was told that more than 4 of these cards would overload the bandwidth when paired with audio interfaces which are aso using bandwidth. Seems like PCIe would change all that. As far as existing authorizations go, I also asked them agout this. there was some willingness to look at this at the time but I never pursued it because I never bought a 5th card. I've seen posts on the UAD newsgroup since then that this request has been denied to some users there.

How about the Precision Multiband? Anyone using that one? It occurs to me that a it make make a nice addition to my mastering arsenal...

It Rocketh mosteth mightlyth. Uses lots of DSP, though. (as does the Neve comp).
