e average Nigerian pay that? Or even afford a car? That's probably a pretty small token gesture for what the oil companies get in return for the exploitation of Nigeria.. although I am sure the government officials do well..

Cheers,

TC

>There are lots of possible explanations.....such as the fact that Nigeria is an oil exporting country. It may have an actual surplus of oil, per capita and it's also possible that there are subsidized or artificial price controls on domestic production due to the royalty structuring of the operating agreements with the corporations who are producing the oil, in other words, Nigeria's royalties may be taken in kind rather than in cash or a combination of both, which could, given very productive wells, create an actual oil surplus within it's borders. I have4n't studied this so it's pure speculation on my part and may be woron, but the above scenarios are definitely possible. If we were producing more oil than we could use here, it would be cheap too.

Not sure what your planning for this but if you having some strange urge to use a small form factor PC with Paris then I would say the Shuttle boxes are a far better option. They actually make a great AMD Nforce 3 chipset 939 based system.

(859) 635-5762HI Spappy,

Paris is 32 bit. It will not work with a 64 bit OS because the hardware driver will not be compatible with 64bit. Paris will work fine with a 64bit processor and a 32bit OS. Example of this would be a AMD 939 based motherboard which is 64 bit compatible but works perfect with 32 bit OS such as Windows xp home or Pro.
