I'm on Mac OSX, and the OS doesn't recognize .ppj or .paf files as belonging to an app. That doesn't mean any harm comes to them - it just means when you download ppjs, they have generic icons.

It sure would sure be nice to have something like the old "fake app" we had for sound designer files. It was dirt simple and didn't actually do anything, it just told the OS it was an app and SD2 files belonged to it, so they got nice icons.

Any OSX coders out there listening? Should be a very simple job. Bonus points if it actually did something - like triggered a script to open your FTP browser and send ppjs to your PARIS comp automatically

Ah, fun days ahead.
