Aight folks, managed to find time to get the Wiki updated to V 1.2 in time for 2010.

The new features in version 1.2 include -

- a "search" box in the upper RH corner (it doesn't work for numerical error codes yet, but it works great with ordinary text like "assertion failed" or "talkback" etc).
- easier to create tables to organize things like key commands or latencies
- supports custom "themes" (yes, that means a proper PARIS theme will be along in due course)
- improved security
- direct navigation via the Wiki's Recent Changes MindMap - if a link is marked by a red arrow, click on it to be taken to that page (try right-clicking for more options). I'll be exploring the possibility of MindMapping the entire Wiki this year; it's a great way to navigate data fast.
- and many more items which I'll try to find time to mention here as I explore more.

Let me know if anything's broken by the upgrade and I'll get on it - and here's to a great 2010!

[PS: if you prefer the previous theme of the wiki, go into "change settings" in the upper RH corner of the Wiki and change it to "default". For some reason, "default" ain't the default - go figure.]

I've had a number of inquiries recently on the signup process for the Wiki; if you want to register (either to participate or simply to access current or future "registered user only" features) just follow this link and enter the seven lowercase letters that can be seen in the following image (thank you thewitch!) when it prompts you for an invitation code. All participation welcome!
