Heh, that stuff cuts quite nicely in all directions; he can speak our language to the point we can understand him, that puts him miles ahead of me in his.

Ah, lots of great memories from my travel days - you ought to have seen my first days struggling in French in Paris.

I remember the day I tried to "introduce" a French guy I know to a French-Canadian gal he fancied. He took me aside after and said "look, I know you meant well, but it's 'presente'. 'Introduire' in French means to 'insert into' - but not in a natural way."

My ex-gf remembers teaching English to a class of 13-yr old boys and inadvertently saying something that translated to "It was so cold today, I had to wear two chickens!" (poule/pull[over]). That was effectively the end of that class's work.

Another memorable moment was the time I got myself in trouble in Morocco inadvertently calling a guy a "dick" in Arabic (who knew "zippy" was an Arabic slang word?). And probably my proudest moment in German was looking through someone's book collection and inadvertently saying "Ah, I see you have a copy of Eugene Herrigel's 'Zen and the Art of Shitting With a Bow'." (in my halting phrasebook German, bogenSHYssen, as opposed to bogenSHEEsen or archery)

Haha, I think everyone who has ever been anywhere has a couple of these. When I was tending bar in dublin, I was dragging one day and turned to a group of waitresses and said 'man I feel like someone slipped me a mickey' and they all burst out lauging.

Apparently the mickey is the male organ....

Hahahahaha. Vely crevel. :)

We were eating at a Chinese place a few months back and had ordered spring rolls. The waitress brought them back and said, clear as a bell, "Here is your spring lorr." I even wondered if she was doing it on purpose.

In my Spanish class a few years ago, I was supposed to say, "A veces de noche tengo miedo." I said, "A veces de noche tengo meirda." So instead of

"Sometimes at night I'm afraid," I said, "Sometimes at night I have shit."

To say your age in Spanish, e.g., "I'm thirty years old," you would say, "Yo that little squiggle over the "n," as we gringos tend to do, you'd be saying, "I have thirty anuses."
