I bought it. I've tried it a few times. So far, I've gotten better results without it. It is handy for showing you what's amiss with the freq's though. Maybe I just need to spend more time with it.

Deej said here a couple of years ago that he tried it with better results for his ears, if I remember correctly. I have it too and for my ears it seems more to smooth out the over all frequencies. If it's to the better, I think it's handle more about taste and just learn how to use it to the better.

I've used it with good results on overall mixes and individual instruments. One of my favorites was when I was having issue getting the right sound out of a snare. Analysed a sampled snare like what I was going for, analysed the record snare, approximated the recorded snare to the samples eq, rendered it and stuck it back in the mix. Sounded great.

My cat coughs them up periodically, but I never thought about using them for anything. I could save them and make a necklace, I suppose.

Stick them in your ears and everything sounds the same.

I was waiting for that one. I figured you would be the one to serve it up.

I've got a collection of them and I'm stringing them together. When you get about 20 of them strung end-to-end and lay the strands out side by side, they look like dreadlocks. I'm gonna' sew them into one of one of those Cheberets and wear it when I go down to the natural food store here. I should fit right in.

OK, but how do you keep your dogs from eating them? They're a dog delicacy, you know.

Ah, Dog Truffles.

And the contents of the litter box too - known to dogs as "Kitty Roca".

Yes, exactly, Kitty Roca. And people let dogs lick their faces.

Oh, no. That ain't going to fly. My cats lick each other in places dogs would not touch.

Yes, but cats don't greet you by slapping a slimy tongue all over your face.
