Sooo, I am picking up the 6 year old from her school, and she did well today so I buy her a nice chocolate milk on the way home.

I stop at a light, I am in the right lane, the light goes green, everyone starts moving, and the kid starts fumbling with her drink. Not wanting chocolate milk in the nice car seats I look over to see if I need to help her, and the car in front of me

stops.....

BANG!

There goes my day...

No airbags and no one hurt, but I put the much on a nice Benz and my Honda Odyssey looks even worse...

DAMMITALL! Not his fault, he was waiting to turn.

Something went through the A/C compressor, so the car drives but no A/C. It will need a bumper and who knows what. I really feel guilty because I hit a Real Estate agent. Nice guy too... They are all just starving out here right now and I am sure this is the last thing he needed to happen.

Schmuck!

Live and learn. Don't lose concentration while driving. Not for a dang moment!

Be glad your daughter's head didn't impact the windshield. This happened to me in a rearend when I was just a little kid andwell.....you know what I'm like now.....

Bummer about your car man, but bigger things are in play here.

Glad nobody got hurt.

Hey DC

You are so right. I sent a little doggie to the other side a few years back. My eyes were off the road for probably one second. In that weensie little bit of time, I could have braked just enough to have avoided him...

Hope all your leftovers get taken care of quickly.

I've done that one too, except I did not lose even a moment of concentration, he just ran out like a bullet....

I cried for hours, I must admit. Sometimes this world really sucks.

thanks for the nice words.

Absolutely. We were only doing about 15 when we hit. I am betting the damage comes to 4K on my car alone though.

I took out a windshield with my face when I was 10... 130 stitches from chin to forehead. I know where you are coming from. Thank God that no one got a scratch today. Our cars are SO much safer today. I would probably not been hurt badly at all in a modern car, but in a 62 Chevy? That's gonna hurt...

thanks...

Today I go get the appraisals...

endless BS... But hey, I did it. We have a rule here.

You fugg it, you fix it.. I fugged it.

My wife calls me up on the cell while I am at NAMM.
(about an hour away) she has locked herself out of the house....

My friend asks me what is wrong. "Oh, the wife has locked herself out of the house."

he goes:

"Oh, I am so sorry you have to leave. I know how much you like the NAMM show"

And I go, HEY, I am not leaving. We have this rule...

So she called the locksmith. No harm no foul.

The trick of course is getting teenagers to understand the rule...
