Play the factory tour videos. Listen up for the description of the conditions under which the workers make the stuff.... teens and 20-somethings living at the factory six to a room in an industrial area accessible by 40-minute ferry ride out of Hong Kong in an obscure concrete jungle hazed by deisel-laden smog.

Yeah, I'm still boycotting their stuff.

I didnt know that behringer used kids to manufacture.
I am starting my boycott immediately.
I saw a PBS special on bluejean manufactures in asia.
Poor kids there. Abused in these factories.
Not paid...etc...
We couldn't make out the name brands on the jeans otherwise we would = have boycotted them.
Makes me sick what these greedy SOBs will do for a buck.
They must be decendants of that large tribe from Apocolypto.
Who was that the Maiyans or Incans or something?

I think it's mostly the same problem whatever we're buying that is made in China in these days.

We already know many great American and European firms that's stopped producing in their home countries, just to get their "great" productlines from China and other countries where people are just a working machine, with no human rights at all. It's not only Behringer that's doing these things. Nearly all things we're buying now a days, as clothes, shoes, el articles, music things like Mackie products and Studio Projects microphones etc. etc., you can see with small writings a place: "Made in China". Most of these workers that's making products for our western countries, are working under conditions as Dubuya is saying here. So I must say we're all living very well in our great western world, with all our China and Eastern products and our great double moral;-)

Just to be clear Erling, without much noise going about doing it, I boycott as much as I can when and where appropriate. I own a couple of Guang Phan products. Didn't know their origins until after I bought. No more. I don't shop Walmart or Target (2 biggest purveyors of chinese made products in the US) unless I absolutely have to because they bring in so many totally Chinese products. And when I do shop there, I don't walk out with anything that says Made in China. I don't buy anything AT&T because they took thousands and thousands of jobs to MeHico 6 years ago. 20 something years ago I stopped shopping K-Mart. They then owned Waldenbooks and together with their K-mart stores placed porn mags right out where kids could see them and refused public pressure to remove them from K-mart stores altogether. Their CEO at the time pretty much called his vocalizing customer base bible-thumping puritans, laughed and went his merry way only to lose his gig a few years later. I didn't celebrate when Big K almost went TU here a couple of years ago but I'm pretty sure my 18 year boycott was felt with the exception that I purchased a one-gallon plastic gas can there one time ater running out of gas.

I did the same with Iomega when I found out that 13 year-old rain forest babies were putting together zip drives. Don't get me wrong; I am not activist although I am certainly a strong bearer of political opinion. But where I'm quick to call BS here (like the time I called it on someone here who said Saddam Hussein was a genius) I'm quicker to quietly do something to shape my world.

Double morals (or what we call "double standards" here in the US) will always reside with all of us to some extent. I've got a few and probably more that haven't been pointed out to me or that I refuse to really look at.

It's getting hard not to buy stuff from China. It seems most computer
HDs are made there now.
