Quick reactions: To quote Bob Roberts "The times they are a'changin' back." ;^) While I don't think Thomson's suicide defines an era, I agree that decades don't define eras either. It bugs me when articles attempt to cram an "era" into the arbitrary numerologic convenience of a decade or century. It's a shame about the drug problem then and now, to an extent a spinoff of militarism and irrational drug policy if you look into it. Drug abuse has wrecked a lot of lives. Science is a method, not a philosophy. It is all about positing theories and then thoroughly testing them to reach conclusions that are always up for further challenge. It's a collaborative discovery process. Anyone, who starts with preconceived conclusions looking only for evidence to support them isn't doing science. On the philosophy side, human worth is held up by most religious and non-religious people alike, although some of both were a
