
Subject: Batting 1000 with Behringer
Posted by [Deej \[1\]](#) on Sat, 20 May 2006 19:08:26 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Yep.....my Untramatch unit just went belly up. Unbelievable. I can now say that every piece of Behringer gear that I have ever owned (except for one-an older Ultramatch SRC 2000).....has either pissed me off or endangered my studio in some way.

headphone amp caught on fire
line mixer was so abominably awful that I gave it away because I couldn't sell it with a clear conscience.
Little midi mixer thingie with moving faders fried a USB port on my mobo when it's USB port went south
Ultramatch Pro SRC 2496 died

I'm getting to the point where I'm glad the FCC is keeping some of their products out of this country. To say they are substandard is a gross understatement.

;oP

Subject: Re: Batting 1000 with Behringer
Posted by [John \[1\]](#) on Sat, 20 May 2006 19:45:33 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Just reading their toilet paper manuals showed me what crap they were. The manuals reflect that the authors did not even want to think the equipment at all. They SUCK period. I hope to never own a piece of their gear, though the arrogant folk in rec.pro.audio.live or whatever it's called love the 32 channel digital behringer, but I wouldn't put much stock in it.

John

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote:

>Yep.....my Untramatch unit just went belly up. Unbelievable. I can now say >that every piece of Behringer gear that I have ever owned (except for >one-an older Ultramatch SRC 2000).....has either pissed me off or >endangered my studio in some way.

>

>headphone amp caught on fire

>line mixer was so abominably awful that I gave it away because I couldn't >sell it with a clear conscience.

>Little midi mixer thingie with moving faders fried a USB port on my mobo

>when it's USB port went south

>Ultramatch Pro SRC 2496 died

>
>I'm getting to the point where I'm glad the FCC is keeping some of their >products out of this country. To say they are substandard is a gross >understatement.

>
>;oP
>
>

Subject: Re: Batting 1000 with Behringer
Posted by wmarkwilson_ on Sat, 20 May 2006 20:39:09 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

You'll be interested to know that the Chinese prices will increase over the short/long terms due to the fact that approximately 5 or 6 months ago, the Chinese gov't decided to revalue their currency to a pool of international currency values whereas prior to that, their value was directly tied to our own currency causing a stable, easily controlled profit margin. Now, in order for them to maintain predictable profitable prices and avoid potential losses caused by currency value differentials between their pool and the USD, they'll have to run a safety margin upmark on US exports. If you shop at Target or some of the other importers of Chinese products, you've already seen a bump. That will continue to rise over the short term.

Dubya

"DJ" <animix_spam-this-ahole_@animas.net> wrote in message news:446f6a0e@linux...

> Yep.....my Untramatch unit just went belly up. Unbelievable. I can now > say > that every piece of Behringer gear that I have ever owned (except for > one-an older Ultramatch SRC 2000).....has either pissed me off or > endangered my studio in some way.

>
> headphone amp caught on fire > line mixer was so abominably awful that I gave it away because I > couldn't > sell it with a clear conscience.
> Little midi mixer thingie with moving faders fried a USB port on my mobo
> when it's USB port went south
> Ultramatch Pro SRC 2496 died

>
> I'm getting to the point where I'm glad the FCC is keeping some of their > products out of this country. To say they are substandard is a gross > understatement.

>
> ;oP

>

>