Well, I must not have been good last year cuz when I asked justcron for only 3 presents (ski boat, jet ski and motocross, though I did add on some yorkville monitors and an allen and heath 16:2 mixwizard) he only sent me one and it wasn't even one of them on my list.

Imagine my wife's surprise when she opened a fedex box with live "lobster" cochroaches. I just thank you for keeping them in a plastic container. It was hilarious to me but my wife was freaking out, seriously freaking out. Meanwhile I'm reading to her how they make great pets (according to the enclosed document) but she really didn't want to adopt them. Sorry. I mean you could have just sent a bag of primo weed (it's still not too late)! hehe

Merry Christmas Justcron and I thought it was hilarious.

I do hate to hurt gods creatures, but I must say, yumm,
Did he send any live oysters? Oh I loves me some oysters.

Chrin is from up here in Boston right?

LOL! Nice work guys.

Funny, I never thought of roaches as pets... ;o)

Cheers,
Kim.

I love google but John, you don;t get the Impressive Defensive Smell, from <http://www.angelfire.com/oh2/Roaches/>

The Lobster cockroach is commonly kept in the U.S. but usually just as a food source... due to their ease of rearing and palatability. The body of this roach is soft enough for almost all predators, there is a high meat to shell ratio, they do not seem to be able to hide as well as many other roaches, and finally, they do not have the impressive defensive smell of many roaches.

unless there's strippers involved it's tough to get 20 of them together...in anything.
