...is the fuckin' best recording EVER! OK, well, let's back off a bit & say it could POSSIBLY be the best fucking recording EVER. At the very least, it's definitely a candidate, yes? I'm not talking about the whole album (although the whole album is great, really, as everyone knows), I'm talking about the seven-minute-and-fifty-five-second title cut that was nailed on the 2nd take with no edits on the basic tracks.

Man, I'm sitting here listening to it, and I think that if there was a way you could compare the best possible recordings of all time from ANY genre and digest them down to some kind of quantifiable "best sound/best playing/best execution/best mix/best mastering" kind of combination and vote on it, "Aja" just might win.

Freakin' GREAT sounds on every single instrument in there, as pertains to the genre being recorded, NOTHING comes across as abrasive, yet it's not so homogenized as to not grab your attention, either (we've all heard mixes like that, right?).

Although, I must say "My Old School" rocks almost as hot in that same voting contest. :D

(Yes, I'm currently in a Steely Dan mode - gotta get some breathing space from the numetal stuff i've been spending so much time on lately! lol)

Roger Nichols gets most of the credit for all the Steely Dan stuff, but as I understand it, Elliot Scheiner really did most of the basic tracks recording & also the mixdowns, so maybe he's really the unsung hero here. Not sure if this applies to Aja, as well, but nonetheless...

....GO LISTEN TO "AJA"!!!!

I had a cassette of it years ago, then I just saw the CD in Walmart for $6.99 recently and picked it up again. I've listened to it a bunch lately, and yeah... it's on up in the top 5, or so, of my favorite sounding recordings.

Used to use it to eval systems I built.

Stopped doing that. Damn thing makes almost anything sound good....

Genius stuff.

Steely Dan went stupid at a young age. Aja showed what live studio musicians could do when they played together and had extended jams. The synergy was amazing. It is still one of the best albums ever.

Since then they totally forgot what a simple formula it is. Now I'm luck if I can get a boring 8 bar solo from Becker on a song they created from a drum machine.

Making a record like Aja is a lot of concentration and work. Maybe they just got lazy.

I used to have that cassette and for about a year it was the only thing I had in my car. It is awesome. My old school totally rocks too. Still one of my all time favs is Haitian Divorce. It's so tasty AND funny.

What he said -

Still load up the vinyl version on my VPI playing through my Beard/Counterpoint

This was the first CD I bought, after wearing out SEVERAL copies of Vinyl.

Love it.

Ahh Aja..I remember it well. I was fifteen and a older friend of mine thought I should hear something that would challenge a that time musicianship..Being somewhat of a hot-shot player, I thought bring it on.IOL!

I played that album(Still own today) everyday from the moment I got it(15 years old).

What amazed me was that I could not figure out the chords. At that time, I had prided myself, on being able to comp any chord I heard. Threw me for a complete loop. My ego was quickly put into check. But, it made me strive to become a more rounded musician. It took me 5 years to finally play the intro to Deacon Blues (20 years old). Once you figure out deacon blues, the rest of the album falls into place. Next up Peg, Black Cow and so on.

Being schooled in Jazz at the time, Aja spoke to a lot of us who were being mentored by the bebop cats, that you can put a new spin on Jazz. Revoice the chords, and play some very inspired, yet very improvised solos to boot.

I'm an official Aja junkie and very proud of it because it raised my game..

If I'm not mistaken, I believe Nichols mastered that record directly through an Ibanez SDR1000 straight to master reel.

My trivia addition:

Q. what is the the signature repeated piano chord that Aja fades out on?

A. B in the bass, A,B,C#,D, and E in the right hand.

I read it somewhere. Long, long ago.

It has to do with the quality of the songs to begin with. They aren't writing "aja's" anymore but I like very much what's coming from D & W these days.

Dood, they were using drum machines that R. Nichols invented back on Gaucho. Namely "Wendell"

Most of the recent works features the work of a young Keith Carlock. <---quite good. My problem with the current drum sound it that it is SO DEAD, hardly any cymbals etc..

Man, you wanna hear some cymbal-less drumming, check out King

Crimson's "Discipline". Single cymbal hits on the 1-count every 8 or 16 measures or so in most songs, with a few rare exceptions in some scattered sections.

Or Peter Gabriel's 4th album (otherwise known as "Security"). Amazing stuff - pretty much no cymbals anywhere.

I'll also throw my 2 cents into the Steely Dan thread - I never understood the appeal. I just plain don't like anything they've done.
Of course, I also just don't get the Dead, either. Sounds like 8 guys on stage, all stoned out of their minds, all playing a different song to their own internal click track.

Oh, wait. That's exactly what was happening on stage....

That's right! I forgot all about that - Gabriel hates cymbals
