Except in a parallel universe that's running a few moments behind us.

....or in the many other countries where the date format is DD/MM/YY (such as Australia) in which case it will not occur until the following month.
;o)

Cheers,
Kim.

Actually no point in time will ever happen again. But we can look forward to 03:04:05 06/07/08 next year.

Of course technically these will all happen again in 210x if you use a two digit year code...

....really, the "special one" was 01:02:03 04/05/0006...

Matter, Energy, Space and Time are each the result of mutual agreement, so if we all decided to agree to it, it could happen again.

Stephanopolis comes to America to play drums in his uncle's Greek restaurant. One day he tunes in a jazz station on the radio and hears a John Coltrane tune. That night he tries out some of the rhythms he heard. His uncle takes him aside at the break and says, "Please, Stephy, we Greeks are a simple people. We don't understand this fancy American music. Just keep the back beat on the 9 and the 13."
